ORIGINATED by Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, a Manchester man of business, who is also the founder and manager of the Refuges for Boys and Girls at Strangeways, Manchester, this Conference has naturally been conducted in business-like fashion, and has occupied itself with evangelistic and philanthropic work, and with considering methods of increasing its quality and quantity. It has hitherto confined itself to Home Mission work, but this year Mr. Shaw and his partner in business and in work, Mr. Kirlew, and each of their helpers, seem to have individually been led by the Spirit to desire a Conference chiefly on Foreign Missions, so when one mentioned it to the other, they found the minds of their brethren all prepared beforehand.

Mr. Wakefield MacGill, the very efficient secretary of the Manchester City Mission (which has multiplied its efficiency under his wise and capable direction), and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, whose name it is enough to mention in connection with evangelistic work, were in hearty co-operation. In spiritual tone and in business-like arrangement, this was a model of what a Christian Conference should be. For not only were various forms of work, in distant lands and at home, described from the point of view of many different minds, but it was manifestly understood that the workers are more than the work; that only through spiritual men and women can the Spirit move; and therefore the consideration of the fitness of the messengers took precedence of the ways and means for proclaiming the message.

The key-note was struck at the preliminary meeting for prayer on Monday night, when a few were gathered in the secretary's room. The opening prayer of Mr. MacGill gave tone to this meeting, and this meeting gave tone to the whole subsequent proceedings.

The Conference meetings were happy in their chairmen. While Christian men, they were also leading men in the commercial world. Mr. James Barlow, J.P., of Bolton, who presided when the subject of Africa was considered, is a leading Temperance reformer, and one of the largest employers of labour in the district. Mr. John Thomson, who presided when Indian missions were dwelt on, is a member of a large Indian shipping house. He is himself an earnest Christian worker, preaching the Gospel every Sabbath, and his wife as useful as himself; both labour among the poor several evenings every week. Mr. Thomson is also a useful member of the Board of the City Mission. On the subject of China, Mr. Isaac Hoyle (an M.P. just elected), an earnest Christian, who, with his wife, is in "labours more abundant." He has joined Mr. Shaw and his band in their midnight work, and is a very large employer of labour, having with his brother, Edward Hoyle, also a zealous Christian, several large mills. Mr. Henry Lee, late M.P. for Southampton, chairman for the next subject, is also another large employer of labour, owning a number of mills; he is an authority both on the Manchester Exchange and Chamber of Commerce. He, with his family, are nearly all engaged in Christian work in various directions. Thus it will be seen that this important Conference was influentially supported.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 8.

The Conference was opened on Tuesday morning by a well attended meeting for prayer and Bible-reading. Prebendary Macdonald, who presided, gave a brief address on the last four verses of Matt. ix, dwelling mainly on the compassion of Jesus towards the multitude. He urged the need of our having a like compassion for the perishing heathen of our own day, and fulfilling his injunction, "Pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into his harvest." Several brethren and sisters afterwards led in earnest prayer.

"THE JEW FIRST."

Mr. J. W. MacGill, in introducing the first speaker, said that some years ago he was showing a friend round the Necropolis at Glasgow, and amongst the tombs he pointed out the Jews' burial-place cut out of the rock. His friend stood for a long time in deep thought, looking through the bars at the familiar Jewish names, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and then he took out his Testament and began reading, "To the Jew first." Then he said, "Mr. MacGill, did you ever notice those words? I hope they will be burned into your very soul. How we have neglected those poor Jews! We have only buried them; I pray God that we may think more of them." Then he lifted up his hands and prayed for the conversion of the Jews. That was the turning point in my life, and I have taken a very much deeper interest in the Jews from that hour. We have began the Conference with the Jews simply because there was pressed upon our souls these words: "To the Jews first." Is it not very interesting to think that we are surrounded by Jews? This is the Jews' quarter of Manchester, but we do not know how to reach them. That is one of the problems we have to solve. We said, "Let us get Mr. Wilkinson down." He, more than any man I ever met, talks with burning zeal about the Jews. Some people speak about the Jews in the minor key; but our dear brother speaks of them in the major key. He lifts up his heart and makes you feel the grand possibilities that are before us. His heart and head are full of this subject, and we have put him in front of this Conference because we believe the Lord would have it so.

The Rev. John Wilkinson (of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews) having referred to the passages: "To them that by patience in well doing . . . eternal life." "For there is no respect of persons with God," "To the Jew first, and also to the Greek," said: Beloved friends, I am more thankful than words can express for the privilege of addressing this Conference on a subject which has been so dear to my heart for nearly forty years. When I was a young fellow, fresh from college, thirty years ago, I was sent down to Manchester, and spent eight weeks here, holding some fifty-two services on forty-nine nights, amongst different denominations, and also speaking to the Jews in their synagogue. But I seem to need a fresh introduction to Manchester, for a generation has passed away since then. I am thankful for several reasons that the subject is not of my choosing; and one principal reason is that it is God's order. "First to the Jew." God's order is the right order, the order for blessing. Another reason is, because it is the first subject in the Conference. If I had my choice I would be the last speaker; but when it means "To the Jew first," then I am thankful to be put in the front, because I believe that a greater blessing will attend this Conference in consequence of the Jew being put in the position in which God places him.

I have been asked for thirty years, what is my opinion upon this Jewish question. I have said that I have no opinion on that subject that is worth anything; but if you mean, What do you think God's Word teaches? then I am ready with chapter and verse. We must learn from the Word of God the line of success, and we can only know it from God's Word. Religion to be sound and practical must be based upon the Bible. I can only know from the Bible the difference between the peace of circumstances and the peace of God. I have no right to interfere with any man's religious practice apart from the authority given by this Book. People are becoming a sort of religion to themselves, and they say, "It is an impertinence to interfere with my religion, which is between me and my God. Leave me alone; I leave you alone." We have no warrant to speak to any man about his religious convictions or practices apart from the authority of this Book.

There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek. "There is no respect of persons with God." If so, why is the Jew put first? It is a matter of order and not of pre-eminence. The words do not interfere with the perfect equality between Jew and Gentile under the New Covenant. In what sense is it to be the Jew first? The Jew was the first-born in the family of nations, and all the Gentile nations are younger brethren and sisters. The eldest son in the family of nations has responsibilities given to no other child in the family of nations. God elected Abraham and said, "In thee and thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." The first promise to Abraham reaches over to the last blessing. We shall never get that promise exhausted until the universe is filled with the glory of God. God says, "This people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise." "Thou art my servant: O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of me." "Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation." "Let Israel hope in the Lord; He shall redeem Israel from all his troubles." That should be our cry. First to the Jew as a matter of order, not of pre-eminence. First in order, because he has greater privileges and higher responsibilities. Responsibility is always commensurate with privilege. The Jews have been punished first, because they have had more light, more privileges, and more blessing than other nations. And God has been just in punishing them more, because He has punished them in proportion to their abused light and privilege. Tribulation and anguish are necessary for the glory of God. The Church of Christ has been willing to let the Jew have tribulation; but the Church of Christ has not manifested the same willingness to let the Jew have blessing. The Church of Christ has spiritualised all the blessings promised to Israel, and literalised all the curses on the Jew. This has influenced commentators, and misled Christian people.

The placing of the Jew first in order is God's arrangement, and it is infinitely wise. Satan's work is largely to frustrate the purpose of God by taking the world out of his grasp. We must study Satan's devices as well as God's plan. The devil has succeeded for ages in damaging the faith of the Church in the conversion of the Jew and the conversion of children. Children are the hope of the Church, and the Jew is the hope of the world. Satan is the deepest student of the Word of God. In our Lord's temptation the devil knew chapter and verse, and the authority of the sacred writings, and his tactics are to thwart the Church of Christ by making her indifferent if not hostile to the instrumentalities which are to take the world out of his grasp. This dispensation was opened by the conversion of three thousand under one sermon preached by a converted Jew. We never had better times than when the Jews took the lead of sinners in this dispensation. But the Christian Church thought that because the Jews were turned out of Palestine their spiritual interests were associated with their national fall, and so persecuted them, and the Jews have hardened their hearts against the Gospel because of the cruelties of a spurious Christianity; and then we turn round and say the Jew is hard-hearted and stubborn and blind, when we have done nothing to soften his heart with the Divine Spirit of Christ.

"First to the Jew, and also to the Gentile." No man is a real and intelligent friend to the Jews who does not take this view of the Jewish question—that it is the key to the world. This belief should arise from intense desire to see the heathen become Christ's inheritance. What is the context of that passage? "Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance." The preceding verse is, "I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion." When the Jews are brought to Christ they will be the channel and instrumentality for blessing to the world. God has punished the Jew because He says, "You only have I known, therefore will I chastise you." Does the punishment of a child show that his father has ceased to love him? No. "I will give the dearly beloved of my soul into the hands of his enemies." What wondrous love is that! He has love like that to his children now, for they are the type of the Church. First in order, first in chastisement, first in blessing.

Paul was pre-eminently the Apostle to the Gentiles. What course did he pursue? He never entered a town or city but he sought out the synagogue and preached the Gospel first to the Jews. That is a fact, not an opinion. Many people admit that it is true up to a certain point, but they say that some of the Jews blasphemed, and then the Apostles turned from the Jews to the Gentiles. That when some blasphemed, Paul and Barnabas waxed bold and said to the blasphemers, "It was necessary the Word of God should first be spoken to you, blasphemers as you are." Now, why was it necessary? On two grounds. You must preach to one first; but while the same Saviour and the same salvation and the same promises will do for both, the same sermon will not do for both. Paul took the parchment Scriptures with him and showed from them that Jesus the Crucified One was the Messiah, and he confounded the Jews. There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek; they are one in Christ Jesus. "Lo, we turn to the Gentiles." Paul preached two sermons, one to the Jews and one to the Gentiles. He had no difficulty in proving the Divinity of Christ, the Trinity of the Godhead, and everything necessary to Christianity from the Old Testament Scriptures. When Peter preached to three thousand "Jerusalem sinners," as Bunyan calls them, he had no New Testament from which to take his text. So don't disparage or neglect the Old Testament. "The New is in the Old contained, the Old is by the New explained;" or, as Martin Luther says: "The New Testament is enfolded in the Old, and the Old Testament is unfolded in the New." Numbers of people read only a chapter of the Bible at a time, and sometimes the close of a chapter breaks the meaning. I believe in reading a whole book, gospel, or epistle at a sitting. I have read, and without hurry, the whole of the Bible in twenty-eight days, forty-three chapters a day, and attended to a great deal of work besides. We get flashes of light by reading the Bible straight through, and then going deep down into every line. The Bible is a mine of wealth that not one Christian in ten thousand has ever explored. There is no book in all literature so interesting as this revelation of our Father from heaven. Oh, let us dig into it, dear friends, a thousand times more than we have ever done yet!

When the Apostles went to Iconium it came to pass that they went both into the synagogue. What to do? "And so spake that a great multitude, both Jews and Greeks, believed." That shows that the Apostles turned only from the blaspheming Jews to the waiting Gentiles. They did not turn from all the Jews then alive, much less from the millions unborn (see Acts xiii. 46; xiv. 1).

If Paul, a missionary to the Gentiles under the present dispensation, never failed to preach the Gospel first to the Jews, do you know any reason why the Christian Church should not observe the same order in evangelising the world? I know none, either in the Word of God or in the position of the Jews. Supposing the Church, without lessening her interest in China, India, Japan, &c., were to modify her arrangements so as to put the Jew in the prominent position he has in the Word of God. Have we anything to invite us in that direction? The Jews are in all lands; they have access to all peoples; they are familiar with the manners, customs, and languages of all nations; their physical constitution adapts them to all climates; they believe three-fourths of our Bible, which form the foundation of the New Testament Scriptures; and they are a God-fearing people, a Bible and a Messiah-believing people; you cannot make atheists of them or idolaters; they have great facility for learning languages; they are a practical people, living much out of doors, and God has elected them for blessing the world.

Mr. Wilkinson proceeded to give a narrative of missionary efforts to show how the Jews could be reached. For thirty-five years he had been a missionary to the Jews, and he preached Christ to a roomful of Jews every Saturday in London. Ten years ago a mission was established to preach the Gospel to the Jews in Great Britain and Ireland. There were nearly 100,000 Jews in this country, and 50,000 in London alone. They had just sent two missionaries to Ireland to visit the Jews in Dublin, Cork, and Belfast. They sent circulars to the richer Jews in London. Nearly one hundred poor Jewesses were gathered into a sewing-class, and their favourite hymn was, "Pass me not, O gentle Saviour." There was a night school of 150 Jewish children, who were taught hymns about salvation in Christ and Gospel stories. There were three preaching stations in London, and medical men to attend the poor sick ones. There was a convalescent home for destitute Jewish children, and evangelistic efforts all over the land to bring the Gospel to rich and poor, young and old, male and female. He had baptized more Jews in the last nine years than in twenty years before. There were Jews in Asia, Africa, and Australia whom he had baptized in the name of Christ. They started ten years ago with the resolve never to ask any individual for a penny, and God had acknowledged and provided for the work because it was his work. The way in which the money came in just when wanted was most wonderful and providential. Mr. Wilkinson concluded by saying, "God is carrying on this work. It is a work dear to his heart, and should be dear to the hearts of his children."

EVANGELISATION IN EUROPE.

Dr. Baedeker thought too much nationality had crept into our Christianity. We are apt to forget that the Gospel has the same marvellous and glorious message to all nations. It had pleased God for many years to pour out blessings upon England beyond any other nation. He often wished that maps of the world were hung up in churches and meeting-rooms to remind us that we owe to others the blessing which we have received. Paul said he was a debtor to the Greek and the barbarian. What was he a debtor for? Just for every bit of Gospel he had received himself; and he did not withhold a single part of it, but poured it out just as he received it, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile. "Freely ye have received, freely give." Give the Gospel not only in England, but jump over the walls, and go into other countries with the precious Gospel, and then a richer and fuller blessing will surely come to this nation.

Dr. Baedeker described his Gospel labours amongst the Jews in Germany. A great number of Jews attended the meetings. Most of the Jews spoke German. He also spoke of Jewish meetings in South Russia, which were filled with Jews who came without any special invitation. He was struck with the inquiring mind there was amongst the Jews, shown by their staying after the meeting and asking questions. If the Jews formed such an important element amongst all nations, surely we were not justified in withholding what belonged to them.

He next spoke of his mission work in Austria, Roumania, and Hungary. None of these countries had been evangelised; the people had never heard the Gospel as it is preached to us every day. The people in those countries were eager to hear the joyful news of salvation. There was an immense field for missionary work in Russia. It was an enormous country, with only just a little of the Gospel seed here and there. Some of the converted Russians had suffered exile and imprisonment in the service of God, and it was wonderful how God had used these earnest men to spread the Gospel. They had put us to shame. A convert in Russia had laboured with great success in the Gospel. He was watched everywhere by the police. At last he went off to St. Petersburg and presented himself to a man high in office there. He warned him that he was in danger of being sent to Siberia. He said, "If the Lord wants me in Siberia I shall go; but if the Lord does not want me, you won't send me there." This touched the heart of the Minister, and ever since that day this man had been free to preach the Gospel right and left.

It would refresh many of God's dear servants who are toiling for Him in this country if they would leave the home field for a time and take the Gospel to the people who are hungering for it. There was a marvellous field for missionary work in Hungary, which was a free land, where the Gospel could be freely preached without let or hindrance.

Some might say, "O that I understood the language." But it was not necessary to speak the native language. Speaking through an interpreter seemed to give a greater charm to the Gospel, and also gave the people time to consider what was said. There are fields ripe unto the harvest, and what was needed was just men and women filled with the Holy Ghost, not in ones and twos only, but in dozens, to flood the land with Gospel truth. South Germany and Bavaria also had hardly been touched by the Gospel. He had been to Bavaria, and men of intellect flocked to hear the Gospel.

Dr. Baedeker had been to Russia several times and had never had a refusal when he desired to hold meetings. There was an opening to convert the Russians through the Germans who resided there. Russia was a land of many nations and peoples, and had hardly been touched with pure Gospel truth. He pleaded for prayers that the Lord would be pleased to open out these lands for the marvellous influence of the Gospel. His closing words were, May God bless his Word and this Conference, so that there may be a great out-going, and that these nations may be filled with his Spirit.

Dr. Ziemann said he would come back to the Jewish question. It was his privilege and sacred pleasure to be present at the baptism of the Jewish Rabbi Rabinovitch, who was now a mighty instrument in the hands of God amongst the Jews in Russia. The baptism was most solemn. It took place in a little chapel in Berlin, and was done in secret, for fear of the Jews. It was feared that if the Jews knew that he was going to confess Jesus, he could not have left Berlin alive. Some professing Christians in England laughed at the idea of converting the Jews, and calculated that each converted Jew cost a thousand pounds. Let us learn from this Conference the solemn lesson that God does not need us for the conversion of souls. God can convert by means of a little child, and with the old stones of Jerusalem. Dr. Ziemann reminded us of the exquisite unselfishness of the Lord Jesus, who wanted to give the greatest of pleasures, that of feeling that it was more blessed to give than to receive. Having made us heavenly citizens, He calls upon us to give and give again, so that we may experience the heavenly joy of giving.

What Germany needed was just what the whole world needed—namely, the Gospel of the living Christ. What had ruined Germany was her cleverness. Germany had the Bible and clever clergymen who could preach exquisite sermons and write clever books, but, everywhere, the churches were empty; you hardly saw a man in them, and no great loss, considering what sort of doctrine was preached. It is only Christ who can heal souls and give peace. Let us feel that there is a living God, and then we shall know what life is.

What Germany wants is true preachers. He could have preached himself to death, so eager were the people to hear the good news of the Gospel. He had not to seek the people, the people sought him. They came in thousands day after day for a fortnight, a great number of them rising at four o'clock in the morning to do their work and then attend the meeting. The large halls in Berlin were crowded with people of all classes. Oh, the joy of preaching to them! He could not preach from a manuscript, for the people wanted speaking to from the eyes and the heart of the preacher. When first he went to Germany he thought he must follow the learned books, but he soon threw the books aside, because he was not learned enough for the learned who did not want second-hand learning, and the common people did not care for it. Then he took his Bible and told the people how God loved them, and it was like an electric shock. For three hours after a meeting he had to deal with anxious souls. Dr. Ziemann mentioned an affecting story of the conversion and death of a young German lady, who returned to speak to him after the others had all left, and received the truth. She was greatly blessed through the translation of Mr. Blackwood's little book, "Eternal Life;" and after she knew she had it, her life was such a bright and powerful testimony that her husband, parents, and family were converted. He begged his auditors to pray for Germany, and spend their holidays there—not on the beautiful Rhine, but amongst the gold diggings of God. Dig in those German hearts, he said, and you will find bright jewels which will adorn your crown, and satisfy the heart of the Lord Jesus Christ. In Germany the clever men always say, "Oh, Christianity has failed!" and I always ask, "Which Christianity? What kind of Christianity?" The modern Christianity, that muddle-puddled Christianity of men of the world, has failed, but not spiritual Holy Ghost Christianity. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe spoke with tears in his eyes in Berlin, and the Socialists who came to disturb him were touched into solemn silence, and souls were saved. Men and brethren, go to Germany. If you cannot speak, weep; and if you cannot weep, pray. Let us lay ourselves out, and give to the world the knowledge which has been given to us of God's love and grace.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe said: I am requested to speak to you about

INTERPRETATION.

I have spoken by interpretation in many countries in Europe. I have gone there when exhausted, and unable to preach in England; and the Lord used it, I think, to restore my health. The services were short, and I could only preach "half-time," because my interpreter took up the other half. After I had done that—especially in France and in French Switzerland—I came back very much restored in health. That was many years ago; and lately, I have again been preaching in different countries and through different languages, in Germany, with the admirable interpretation of our brother, Dr. Baedeker, who knows English as well as he knows German. The moment the words were spoken in English they were translated into German and later into Russian.

Now I would like to endorse what Dr. Baedeker said about the immense size of Russia; and I believe that an Englishman or an American, if he went there, would have more liberty than a Russian, and have no difficulty with the language at all. When I went to St. Petersburg with my wife and daughters, I at once began to preach. So I did in Germany. And that souls are saved we knew when passing the same way, perhaps, twelve months or two years or so afterwards. The pastors tell us, when we inquire of them, that not only are souls awakened, and not only converted, but, what is a very difficult thing for a German to do, they have come right out and been baptized. The Baptists in Germany, I may say, are very few.

Now there is one sorrowful feature about the visits of Englishmen on the Continent who are preachers in their own country, and it is enough to make one weep. I mean when, instead of preaching, they merely give away a tract, or a thousand tracts, or even ten thousand tracts or cards. I have in my mind now a most blessed man in the North of England. He went with two or three friends to Norway, and came back after distributing thousands of tracts. I asked him, "Have you been preaching to those people?" "No," said he, "I didn't know the language." "Why didn't you preach through interpretation?" "Oh," he replied, "we never thought of it!" Now, dear friends, do let us think of it; let us take Dr. Baedeker's advice. You cannot all speak in these different tongues, but there is not one man here who cannot speak through an interpreter, not one lady who could not go to these countries on the Continent and speak, through an interpreter, to the people in her own language.

On one occasion my interpreter met the priest of the State Church, who told him that the building would be at my disposal. I sent word that I was unwell, and not able to go, but would look to the Lord, and see if I could come next Sunday. So the church was put at my disposal. This was the Established or State Church, and is higher than the Church of England. There are scarcely any dissenting churches in all that province. Well, we found that the building was not big enough, and when the other priests were spoken to they offered me the parish church—a huge building that had to suffice, not only for the town, but for ten miles on each side of it. But some took the objection that I was a layman, and ought not to preach the Gospel. I then said to the people, "The Saviour was very much accustomed to preach in the open air—more, perhaps, than in any other way—and for many years I have been exceedingly fond of preaching in the open air. I think next Sunday we ought to be in the open air." I asked the priest to come with me to the Mayor, and it was arranged that the meeting should be in the public park or gardens. We expected a large number, so we had a very large, high stage erected, but the crowd increased in such numbers, and continued to do so, that before we had gone on ten minutes we were obliged to interrupt the service and raise the pulpit, so that the voice of the interpreter might be heard.

These people flock out in numbers to hear the Gospel. They have not heard it before, and Paul says, you know, "How shall they hear without a preacher?" And in Germany, when a man's converted, what does he say? "I never heard this before;" although perhaps he may have gone to church for years. Is it not a shame that we should allow this to continue, so near, too, to our shores?

Now, with a view to encourage our sisters to go right off to the Continent, let me tell them this. On the occasion just referred to, when I was ill, I said there was a lady—an English lady—with me, and that she would speak. They said they had no objection to her speaking in a church filled with women, and so it was arranged for the men to keep away. There were, however, exceptions that ought not to have happened, five young priests being present besides the canon. But the meeting was held, and there they were. Many of the women were most earnest, but groping in the dark—taking the Lord's Supper and going to church every Sunday morning, but not knowing the wonderful truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

I have dwelt at some length on this question of Interpretation because requested to do so. Now, do not, when going on the Continent, be content with giving away thousands of tracts or cards, although they are very nice for gathering your congregation when commencing to preach. Do not wait till you are taking your holiday. This thing cannot be played with. Be in deep earnestness. Let us take up the cross, and carry to these Continental nations the words of the Lord Jesus. And Christ will be pleased with you. A dear friend of mine, a merchant in Glasgow, has just thrown up his lucrative position in order to go out to the heathen in China. And what has been his experience since he threw up all this money and his partnership? What has been his experience? He has just been filled with "joy unspeakable and full of glory." I parted with him a few weeks ago, at the corner of a street in Edinburgh, after speaking to the students in the U.P. Hall, not knowing when we should meet again, and as he left he shouted "Hallelujah!" And if some of you would get a change, leave all behind you, and follow the Lord fully, you and I would be able to shout, "Hallelujah, praise the Lord!"

AFRICA.

The hymn, "From Greenland's icy mountains," was sung, and Canon Stowell engaged in prayer.

The Chairman (Mr. James Barlow, Bolton) expressed the pleasure and honour he felt it to preside over a Conference having such a grand object as the evangelisation of the world. When he was young, Africa was looked upon as a "dark continent." People had no conception of its extent nor of its population. In the good providence of God, Africa had been opened up by the labours of Moffat, Livingstone, Stanley, and others, and we are thankful to know that many missionary societies are represented there, and labouring to repay the debt we owe as a Christian country to that benighted land. A generation or two ago Africa was robbed of her sons and daughters, who were sent to America to grow cotton for the people of England. Thank God, those days are past! Slavery has been abolished in Christian countries, and he hoped the day was not distant when slavery would cease throughout the world. We could not but feel thankful that God had put it into the hearts of men to undertake this glorious missionary work, and that when one fell another was ready to take his place. He had watched with deep interest the mission on the Congo. He was present years ago when a band of good men were consecrated for mission work, and he should never forget the devotion of that godly young man, MacCall, who gave his life to the cause. In other parts of Africa Christian men had done the same. There were two hundred million people in Africa who were craving for the Gospel. We ought to feel our own personal responsibility in helping on this work that Christ left us to do. Those who were not prepared to give their lives should support those who were willing to make that sacrifice, if needful—men who reminded us of apostolic days, for they went out, as in the interesting Kabyle Mission, without purse or scrip, to tell the wonders of redeeming grace.

Mr. Eugene Stock (Editorial Secretary of the Church Missionary Society) had for his subject "The Gospel in the Dark Continent." He said that Africa had 438 languages and 163 dialects. How was one to talk of such a continent in thirty minutes? He would crowd as many facts into the time as possible. Though closely associated with the Church Missionary Society, he wished to speak of the work of all. To go back to the beginning of the mission work would take them back to apostolic times. Amongst the hearers of Peter's sermons were some who belonged to Egypt and the parts of Lybia about Cyrene. They, no doubt, took back the message they heard, and that was the first preaching of the Gospel in the Dark Continent. And it was not fruitless preaching, because Egypt and North Africa were for three or four centuries in the forefront of Christendom, and some of the greatest Christian names belonged to North Africa. In Egypt they were taken back to Apollos himself, Marcus, Alexander, Clement, and Athanasius. In North Africa there was Augustine, one of the greatest names in all Christian history. Though they were all gone, Christianity could hardly be said to be absolutely gone. There was a sort of Christian Church still; they did profess to worship Christ, and that was all that could be said. In North Africa there was nothing. Why? There was a solemn thought in the answer to that question. Bishop Wilberforce said, in the Free Trade Hall at Manchester, that the Church of Egypt did send out missionaries and it survived, although degraded and corrupted, but the North African Church never was a mission church, and therefore the candlestick was removed out of its place. Let us take that lesson home.

Then came Mahomedanism, the scourge of God, to sweep away those fallen churches. Through long centuries there had been no gleam of light in the darkness, excepting one name, which ought to be better known. Raymond Lulle, the Franciscan friar, though a monk, was united to the Lord Jesus Christ by a living faith. He gave up everything in Italy to preach a Gospel in Africa, which he did for fifty years. He was again and again expelled by the Mahomedans, and when nearly eighty years old he went back to tell them about the Lord Jesus, and he was stoned to death. He wrote:—"Once I was rich and led a worldly life. I resigned all to diffuse the holy faith. Now I am old and poor; but I shall persevere until death." "I have sought Thee in the crucifix, and my bodily eyes could find Thee there. I sought Thee with the eyes of my soul, and as soon as I found Thee, my heart grew warm with the glow of Thy love." That was written in the dark ages, and was something to be thankful for.

Mahomedanism had Africa to itself. What was the result? It was the fashion in literary and scientific circles to exalt Mahomedanism. One writer of repute spoke of it as "redeeming Africa." In point of fact, it had enslaved the people. Another famous man described the Mahomedan priests as "single-minded missionaries." Dr. Schweinfurth termed them "incarnations of human depravity."

Then came the time of the Jesuits, who sent many noble men to Africa, but there was hardly a vestige left of all they did. The chief city in the country, San Salvada, was named after the Saviour, but he feared there was neither holiness nor belief in the Saviour. Who were the first Protestant Christians after the Reformation to take reformed Christianity to Africa? Need we ask? Are not the Moravians always first? They were followed by that noble organisation, the London Missionary Society, which sent Vanderkemp, Robert Moffat, and Livingstone, and they were followed by many others. The Wesleyans had been devoted to the work. Our German brethren had done noble work there. There was the remarkable mission of French Protestants to the Basutos, and Lovedale, an institution something like the Boys' Refuge, was the centre of their work. The Church of England was represented in South Africa by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, which had extensive missions. The Church Missionary Society went to Zululand forty or fifty years ago.

Leaving South Africa, let us go to the West Coast. The Moravians were the first to go to the Gold Coast; but their mission failed. The history of mission work in West Africa was practically the same as the story of the slave trade. England was the greatest slave-trading nation, though England did not begin it. England repented, and took the lead in putting it down, but it took a long time. Although West African slavery was abolished under the efforts of Wilberforce, it was still carried on by ships down to our own day. Three years after Queen Victoria came to the throne no less than 138,000 slaves were exported from West Africa for Brazil and Cuba; and the city of Manchester sent out £250,000 worth of cotton goods to buy slaves.

The most successful missions were those amongst rescued slaves in the colony of Sierra Leone, which was taken under the protection of our Government. But things went worse and worse until 1816, when the Government got the Church and Wesleyan Missionary Societies to take up the work of education and conversion. It was a work of great trial and disappointment. The Church Missionary Society in twenty-two years sent seventy-nine missionaries to Sierra Leone, and almost all of them laid their bones on the West Coast of Africa. Three devoted bishops laid their bones there within five years of one another. But there has never been wanted a succession of devoted men to take up the work. The population was only professedly Christian. Two devoted men, Mr. Darwin Fox and Mr. Dodd, have now gone forth to preach the Gospel to the dead and sleepy Christians of Western Africa. May God bless them and prosper their mission!

Missions had branched out from Sierra Leone a thousand miles, to Liberia and along the Gold Coast and up the Niger: everywhere there were native negro missionaries. Lagos was a slave-exporting port as late as 1861; then the slave trade was stopped by British power. From that day Lagos had become the most flourishing commercial port on the Western Coast of Africa. There was a large cotton trade. How did that cotton trade begin? The cotton came to Manchester. Who brought it there? He was astonished and delighted when he came into that room to see that it was called the "Thomas Clegg Memorial Hall." Thomas Clegg was a Manchester merchant who, under the inspiration of Henry Venn, began and developed the legitimate and lucrative trade which was to supplant the illegitimate slave trade. The first two cotton gins sent out were a present sent through the society he (Mr. Stock) represented, to Samuel Crowther, by the Baroness Burdett Coutts. The Wesleyans had also done a noble work on the Gold Coast, and so had the Baptists at the Cameroons. Saker was a sacred name. We ought to remember the old names. No man had done a nobler work. Then our dear brethren of the Basle Missionary Society had established themselves in Ashantee and the Gold Coast.

A word about the Niger. Twenty years ago it was almost impossible to get up the Niger. There were no means of communication. Now we had a great company with a million of capital doing an export trade of two millions a year. This showed the extraordinary development of the country. A British protectorate had been proclaimed over the whole of that great region. He was sorry to say that one of the great articles of trade was gin. We sent them more gin than Bibles. But the African National Company was limiting the export of gin as far as possible. He wished the trade in gin could be stopped altogether. Thousands of people on the Niger had thrown away their idols, and a good proportion of the worshippers were true living Christians. The whole of the missionaries were black men. Three men submitted to death rather than deny their Saviour.

Liberality! We don't know what liberality is compared with those poor African Christians. The other day an iron church was shipped from Liverpool capable of holding 1200 people, at a cost of £1000, every penny of which had been given by the black Christians. The natives at another station said they must have an iron church also. They collected much money, but were short of £240; while they prayed a chief named Sambo heard about it, and one night shortly afterwards he brought a bag containing 240 sovereigns.

Though we have done so little, God has done a great deal. The University of Cambridge had for the first time honoured itself by conferring an honorary arts degree on Mr. Henry Johnson, a black missionary. As Egypt was the first to receive the Gospel at the beginning, so it was the first to receive it in modern days. In 1826 we sent a missionary to Egypt and then to Abyssinia. Old Dr. Kraft went down the coast and began the first mission on the West Coast of Africa in 1844. From that time to this, two great names had been the starting point of missionary work, both geographical and linguistic, Kraft and Livingstone.

Kraft was first, and both did remarkable work, though not so much directly evangelistic work, or they were travellers, and explorers, and pioneers. It was owing to Kraft's researches that all the travellers went out and discovered rivers, lakes, and mountains, and Livingstone's name and influence had produced marvellous results since his death. Both these men were found dead in the same way, on their knees.

Livingstone's death woke up England to missionary work, and the first to come to the front were Scotchmen, who started the noble Free Church Mission on Lakes Zambesi and Nyassa. Stanley was the first man to find out all about the Congo. This was what started four great missions—the Church, London, and Baptist Societies, and the Livingstone Congo Mission of Mr. Grattan Guinness, now carried on by an American Baptist Society. Those missions had had heavy and sore trials. The Lord had ruled that the Gospel should go to Africa with much sorrow, tears, and sacrifice of life. The London Missionary Society had solemnly debated whether they should abandon Tanganyika; but, thank God! they had resolved that nothing should make them give it up. There had been great trials and a capricious king to deal with. On January 30 three boys were slowly roasted to death for their faith, and died singing hymns to the Lord Jesus Christ. But had the missionaries retired? On the contrary, one of the executioners was so struck with the fortitude of those boys, that he came and said, "Teach me to pray." The latest news was that on a Sunday in July a congregation of 170 worshipped in the church at Uganda, and thirty-seven sat down to the Lord's table.

One other name must be mentioned—that of Gordon, who said, "Pray for the poor people I am sent to;" and we had prayed for them as well as for that Christian hero. For this Dark Continent we could only say—

"Spirit of Truth and Love,
Life-giving, Holy Dove,
Speed forth Thy flight!
Move o'er the water's face,
Burning the lamp of grace,
And in earth's darkest place,
Let there be light!"

Rev. Dr. Kennedy asked how he was to give any intelligent idea of the work of the London Missionary Society in Africa in fifteen minutes. He was not a missionary, but he had been for many years a director of the London Missionary Society, and had had a good deal to do with the men who had gone out, and with the direction of the work at home. That society had sent out from first to last 145 missionaries, of whom 82 had gone to the Cape Colony, 39 to the regions immediately beyond, and 22 to the Central African Mission on Lake Tanganyika. The first two missionaries to Africa were Dutchmen. The first of them, Vanderkemp, was a man of great learning and high position at Leyden. His heart yearned over the people who were the slaves of his countrymen in Africa. He was not a believer; he was a positive unbeliever; but the providence of God deprived him of his wife and daughter, who were drowned by the upsetting of a boat. He could find no comfort in his unbelief or philosophy, but he found comfort at last in Christ. Such was his spirit of devotion to his work that, though he was fifty years old when he came to London, he went into the brick fields, working with his own hands, that he might know how to make bricks in Africa. He lived for eleven or twelve years in Africa.

The natives of the colony were slaves—Hottentots—a synonym for all that was low and ignorant, and were regarded, even by Christian people, as not worth caring for. Dr. Phillips, a missionary, had the honour of bringing Hottentot slavery to an end, after much conflict with English mis-government and despotism. It was a remarkable story, as told in Dr. Phillips's book. One of the most hopeful things connected with our missions in that colony was that most of the native churches were self-supporting. The policy of the London Missionary Society had been to throw them upon their own resources. He feared that this had been done too early. The colony offered an illustration of the true Evangelical Alliance principle. The Free Church of Scotland, the United Presbyterian Church, and the South African Congregational Union had united in forming a college, each of these bodies appointing a professor, and working conjointly; thus doing by union what they could not have done separately. The object of the college was to train both Europeans and natives for the work of evangelisation. He had great hopes that by and by, through the grace of God, the Dutch Reformed Church, which was as orthodox as the Westminster Confession of Faith, would awake to a sense of its responsibility, and be found a far more efficient worker in those parts than any of our societies.

The second division of their mission was to Bechuanaland, a great region lying west and north. It was associated with the name of Dr. Moffat. It was from Manchester that Dr. Moffat, a young Scotch gardener, went out to Africa, after a few months' training under that good man Mr. Roby. It was not, as a rule, wise to send out untrained young men to those regions. It was a miracle of God's providence that that young gardener turned out so well; but for every untrained man who had succeeded and done anything notable, many had utterly failed.

Moffat's labours were most extraordinary, as shown in his book, which was published forty years ago. He had lately been reading it again, and also "Moffat's Life," and was bold enough to imagine that Moffat was better fitted for that particular work than even the Apostle Paul would have been. Paul never had to preach amongst savages, or face a real lion, as Moffat had. Robert Moffat had the gifts and graces needed for missionary work among those savage tribes. In conclusion, Dr. Kennedy said: Mr. Stock has told you that we have seriously considered whether we should abandon the mission on Lake Tanganyika; not that there was one director who had any doubt, but to satisfy friends outside. We felt that we dare not give it up. God has given it to us, and God has given us heroic men to preach the Gospel around that great Lake, 300 miles long, and 14 to 40 broad, and, having given us that work to do, God helping us, we shall do it.

CONGO MISSION.

Rev. H. E. Crudgington, who represented the Baptist Congo Mission, gave an account of the work which is being done on that river. The Baptist Missionary Society began the work in 1879, and he had the honour to be one of the first to go out. San Salvador was at one time a fine flourishing city, but nothing remained of Christian truth when they went there. The people had a few crucifixes, but no intelligent idea of God, or of Christ as a Saviour. They were thwarted by the natives, and one of his colleagues was shot at, but he (the speaker) extracted the bullet and saved his life. Then they went to the other side of the river, to Stanley Pool. The River Congo was navigable for small steamers for 115 miles from the sea; then there were cataracts and rapids for 250 miles; above which there was a clear navigable course of more than 1000 miles. After a short obstruction, there was another thousand of navigable water, with large rivers branching off in all directions, giving more than 5000 miles of navigable streams, with 40,000,000 of people, none of whom had any idea of God, or of Christ as a Saviour. They tried to put a steamer on the upper portions of the river, to carry the Gospel into the interior. There were many difficulties. Though slaves were not now sent wholesale to America, he could tell of things which might well make them cry to God for vengeance upon the slave traders. At first he constantly heard the screams of the poor women slaves who were thrashed for trifling offences. He had known slaves to be chained in gangs, or floated down the river in barrels as targets to be shot at. A man crucified a slave for a trivial offence. On expostulating with the man, he said, "Why did you missionaries come? We did not send for you; we did not want you. These people are only fit to be slaves." They are our brothers and sisters, and God calls upon us to do all we can to improve their position.

That was the dark side of the picture. He was happy to say that as the result of their labours he had seen the horrible traffic in human life stopped to a large extent. Their work on the Congo was amongst the boys. They believed in removing the boys from vice and superstition, and so mould their characters that they might grow up to be useful men, serving God, and ready to tell their people what God had done for them. He had arranged for some noble women to go out and devote themselves to this work. Though his life had been in danger, God had preserved him, and now the people welcomed them, saying, "Get out of the road! The white man is coming! Bring him a mat and some water." The people had an idea of God, but it conveyed no conception of a loving Father. Their notion of heaven was having plenty to eat, and of a day of rest as a time for dancing. They thought that death was the end of them. Incidents were mentioned to show their trustfulness and gratitude. It was a great thing to have gained their confidence in so short a time. They only went six years ago, and the people were then dreadfully afraid of the white man—the slave traders.

The speaker appealed to the Manchester merchants to assist in Christianising these people, by establishing a chain of stations into the interior, and putting a stop to the horrible traffic in slaves, rum, and gunpowder. He thanked God that the Portuguese had no control over the Congo, for their power would have meant the resuscitation of the slavery abomination, the stagnation of commerce, and the prevention of all missionary enterprise. Something had been done, but a great deal more ought to be done. Did the Christian people of England think they were doing enough for these dark Africans? The speaker referred to the medical branch of their work. Some of them had studied medicine, so that through their medical knowledge they might reach the hearts of the people, whose spontaneous love and gratitude repaid for disappointment, trouble, and anxious care.

KABYLE MISSION.

Mr. E. H. Glenny, who was attired in Eastern fashion, spoke of the Kabyle Mission, North Africa, and its people. He was there to plead the cause of those who could not plead for themselves. Referring to a large map suspended above the platform, he said it was made by a young lady in his house, a governess, and similar ones could be made by any young lady who had some knowledge of painting. If the young ladies could not go abroad, they could make maps at home. From the Senegal River, north, to the Soudan, was a district bigger than British India and eighteen provinces of China; more than sixty times as big as England. It was inhabited principally by two races, the Berbers and the Arabs. The Berber race had inhabited that part of North Africa for more than three thousand years. The country had been conquered by the Romans, Vandals, and Arabs. The name of Arabs was frequently misapplied. The people with whom we had been fighting in Dongola and Berber were not Arabs, and they did not speak Arabic. In Algeria, out of a people of about three millions of natives, there were not more than half a million Arabs. In Morocco and Tripoli it was the same, for though the people spoke Arabic, they were not Arabs. The Berbers were totally distinct from the Negro in race and language. Their language was as old as the Hebrew, and older than Arabic. It was an unwritten language, but the Bible Society hoped shortly to issue the Gospel of John in English characters in the Berber language. The whole of the Gospels was in manuscript.

Four years ago he landed, with Mr. George Pearse, in Algiers. At that time there was not a single Protestant missionary to the natives. There were two missionaries to the Jews, twenty French priests for the French population, and two or three English chaplains; but to the native Berbers and Arabs there were no missionaries whatever, notwithstanding that Algiers could be reached from London in three days. He had travelled from Africa to London in seventy-two hours. It was a near field for missionary work, not like Central Africa. The Bible Society had at that time no agency in North Africa. There was a small depôt in Algiers, under the charge of the Jewish Mission, in a private house. Four years ago saw the beginning of this mission to the Kabyles, who were fine, noble-looking men, the Highlanders of North Africa, a mountain race, bold and brave, and a comparatively moral people—for Africans. They were noble both in appearance and character. Mr. Pearse spoke to Mr. Guinness about them, and Mr. Guinness went over and saw them. At his request Mr. Pearse collected facts which were published. Unknown to either Mr. Pearse or Mr. Guinness, he had it on his mind to found an industrial mission for North Africa. He went to Mr. Guinness about it, and this led to his going out with Mr. Pearse. Since then other missionaries had gone forth. They could not tell of many conversions but of brothers and sisters sent forth, and of open doors and open ears to listen to the Word of God. Wherever they went they got a hearing, even in dark Morocco. Two years ago he went out for the third time, and now there were seventeen brothers and sisters in North Africa working for God. The Bible Society had two able agents and colporteurs. Several other branches of the Christian Church had been stirred up. Though the colony had belonged to the French for fifty years, they had done nothing; now they were being stirred up, and so were others. There was plenty of room for all, and he bid them all God-speed.

There was a vast region untouched. They hoped to send a brother and sister in a few weeks to begin the work in the south part of the province of Constantine, where there were about 700,000 souls, without a single person to tell them of Christ. The brother who was going there was a Dutchman, a most earnest fellow. The variety of brethren at work was remarkable. There were a brother and two sisters from America; two French brethren; a Swiss brothe and two sisters; a Scotch brother with his wife and Scotch sister; an Irish sister; and now they were going to have a Dutchman. There was a greater deficiency of English than any other nation. These Kabyle and Berber races, if brought to a knowledge of Christ, would be useful in carrying the Gospel to the people beyond. There were large cultivated places in the Sahara, fishing tribes on the coast, and a Manchester house had a trading station. About £10,000 had been spent altogether in sending the Gospel to a district bigger than India and eighteen provinces of China—not so much to evangelise this dark country as would be spent in building one good-sized church, or even a steeple. More labourers were wanted. The Lord had sustained them in the past, and He would in the future.

Mr. MacGill spoke a few encouraging words, and expressed the hope that Manchester would send out some missionaries. He mentioned that this part of Africa had a most charming climate. No place in the world was better suited for delicate people, who might make a Christian colony there instead of going to Torquay.

Major-General Haig said that missionaries had told him of the kind manner in which they had been received there. The climate was healthy, though the heat was trying in some parts. The door seemed to be wide open in Morocco. Wherever Christian missionaries went in that country they would receive a hearty and kindly welcome.

Major Tucker, of the Salvation Army, spoke of their work in the extreme South of Africa. They began amongst the English and Dutch people, and had been greatly blessed. They hoped to get an opening with the natives. In India, Africa, and other countries they found that a great deal could be done through interpreters. There were great possibilities in Africa, and he believed God was going to do great things for that country.

Rev. J. Wilkinson, in supplementing a former address, said he held in his hand a copy of the Hebrew New Testament. They had two other Hebrew translations. They were the work of a fellow-student of his, and he died as soon as he had accomplished it. The first edition was sold out in a month. Thousands were ordered for America. Another edition of 10,000 was going through the press in Vienna. The translation was in the purest Hebrew idiom of any age. The Jews were ready to receive the New Testament by thousands. He asked their prayers for God's blessing on the wide distribution of this Hebrew Testament all over the world. It was in his heart to extend the mission to the Jews on the lines he had been following for ten years. He proposed to send an itinerant mission to France, Germany, Roumania, and Russia, spending a few weeks in a place, and, as God opened the way, flood the Jewish world with this beautiful Hebrew Testament. He asked for their prayers that God would open a plain way for this work next year. He hoped it might be early in the spring. He had twenty-six men and women in London ready for the work.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Rev. Dr. McCall took the chair, opened with prayer, and delivered a short address, preparatory to the introduction of the next branch of the Conference business—namely, South America. The chairman praised God for the good work done, and prayed for an abundant blessing on the efforts that were to follow all the world over.

Rev. Prebendary Macdonald, M.A., said he wondered that for so long a time South America had been of little interest to the Christian people of England. Until 1851, scarcely anything had been done. In that year occurred the martyr deaths of seven devoted missionaries upon one of the islands of Torra del Fuego, as told in the story of Captain Allen Gardiner. The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church. So it was in this case. A cry was raised in England, "Shall the work of these devoted men be stopped?" One noble man, Gaspard, of Bristol, said, "No." A noble work had gone forward, first in the education of boys in the Settlement off the coast of Patagonia. By degrees they got a hold of the people, and now there was a noble mission established there, with an orphanage and schools. The Scriptures had been translated, that was a wonderful fact. These people were naked savages when Mr. Stirling went out. He brought five of the savages to this country. They were then clothed, and in their right mind, sitting at the feet of Jesus. He heard them repeat the Lord's Prayer, and sing, "There is a fountain filled with blood." Mr. Stirling was his curate. His life was often in danger, but in God's mercy he was preserved. After seven months' labour he returned to this country, and in 1869 was consecrated bishop, and had since been superintending the work over nearly all South America. The work was going on. There were twenty millions of people. The Society was small, with an income of about £16,000 a-year. What was that for South America? What were thirty men and two or three devoted women for such a work? Was not this a matter for prayer to God? An endowment fund had been set on foot, and one lady had given it generous support. He hoped his appeal on behalf of this fund would not be in vain.

The hymn, "Jesus, where'er Thy people meet," was sung, and Mr. J. E. Mathieson offered up prayer.

TUESDAY EVENING.

The subject of Conference this evening was "The World for Christ." A fervid address on this topic, so congenial to him, was given by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch: It is the practical character of this Conference that induced me to respond to the invitation to take part therein; for it is the lack of this that forms so serious a defect in many of the Conferences which have been held in multiplied number of late years. They have been too doctrinal, and not practical enough—a defect which I sincerely hope may be remedied in future assemblies of the kind.

There are two expressions I find used on the programme for to-day—"The Evangelisation of the World," and "The World for Christ." Now, beyond all doubt the world will yet be for Christ; created and redeemed by Him, it shall in due time universally acknowledge his beneficent sway, though the time is not yet. "Ask of Me, and I will give Thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession;" and, again, "Righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the channel of the great deep." But, ere the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord, we know, from the "sure word of prophecy," that He Himself must appear. Meanwhile, He is in patience waiting for the ingathering of his Church—waiting for his servants to fulfil his commission to evangelise the world, "for the Gospel must first be preached in all nations for a witness." The commission given by our glorious Lord after his resurrection was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." But how has the Church carried out the commission? Alas! eighteen centuries have passed, and to-day the greater part of the world is still sunk in the gross darkness of heathenism, and hundreds of millions have never heard the glorious Gospel of the grace of God. Surely this proves that a very pressing need—I had almost said the most pressing need—to-day is to evangelise the Church; for what is the meaning of evangelising? Is it not to gospelise? And who will venture to say that the Church is really evangelised with the "Gospel of God?" Do we not see large numbers of her professing ministers and teachers giving up—if they ever held—the very first principles of the Gospel—those great foundation truths of our most holy faith, without which all preaching is utterly ineffectual to convert a sinner or energise a saint? Many of the pulpits of our land are riddled with infidelity; Christ is dethroned, and his cross ignored or explained away; and an emasculated, lifeless Gospel has taken its place. The Evangel of a full, free, and present salvation, through a crucified and risen Jesus, is not preached in thousands of pulpits where we may have hoped to have found his glorious, saving Name exalted. Yet we pretend to wonder why the churches and chapels of our land are not full, while, indeed, in many cases, they are almost empty, and the world is not evangelised.

Not a few of our colleges, too, need to be evangelised; for, instead of sending out men full of faith and the Holy Ghost to the foreign field, are they not turning out bands of young men deeply imbued with Rationalism and Socinianism?—men whose minds are full of "modern thought," and sharpened by so-called "higher criticism," so that they have no room for "the Gospel which is the power of God unto salvation" for a perishing world. Are these the sort of men to evangelise the lands buried in the darkness of heathenism?

Coming nearer home, what as to ourselves? Are we really evangelised in the full sense of that blessed word? and have we so understood and believed the Gospel of the love and grace of God as to receive it, with all its sanctifying power, into our hearts, calling forth the dedication of our lives, in the consecrated energies of our whole being to Him and his service? We have read the title-deed of our inheritance; but are we living upon and spending the wealth made over to us in our risen Head? The Gospel tells us of how we have been "delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of his dear Son;" that we have been "saved from the wrath to come," and "called to God's eternal glory;" that we are, even now, made millionaires in all the spiritual wealth of Christ Himself, as sons and joint-heirs with Him. But how are we manifesting this? and what return are we making to the Lord who bought us with his precious blood? Alas! the coldness of our hearts, the silence of our lips, the worldliness of our lives, the unemployed talents, the unconsecrated gold of vast numbers, testify against us. Oh! that the living God may speak by his Spirit, as from the cross of Christ, once more to our hearts, and constrain us to yield ourselves afresh to Him, evangelised indeed, sanctified and meet for his use, ready to go wherever He may send us.

Rev. James Gall, after referring to the extraordinary success that attended both the Home and Foreign Missions of the Apostolic Church, and the importance of studying their methods, said he would confine himself that evening to their first systematic foreign mission from Antioch, as in the case of Paul especially we have an example of all the three methods of support. First, from the private fortune of the missionary himself; second, from the proceeds of his own manual labour; and third, from the liberality of others.

The first two missionaries who were selected by the Holy Ghost were men of independent means, probably the wealthiest men in the Church at the time. Many have supposed that Barnabas sold all his possessions and became dependent on the common fund for his support. That was not the case. In the revised New Testament we are told that Barnabas, "having a field, sold it," but it does not follow that Barnabas had nothing but this one field to depend on. The community of goods mentioned in Acts iv. was not communion (Acts v. 4), and there are various indications in Scripture that Barnabas was a man of property, and on that account was able to render important service to the Church in consequence of his being free (Acts xi. 22—30, xii. 25). His sister appears to have been in easy circumstances in Jerusalem, and her son, John Mark, was free to go with his uncle or remain at home if he chose (Acts xv. 37).

In regard to Paul, although he belonged to Tarsus, he had been educated in Jerusalem (Acts xxii. 3), and must have been independent of business when we find that he gave his whole time to the prosecution of the Nazarenes. Instead of his being employed by the high priest, it was the high priest that was employed by him (Acts ix. 2). The persecution was carried on by himself (Acts xxii. 4), and at his own expense; and, considering what he did and what he proposed to do (Acts ix. 2), the expense must have been very great. If Paul had been only a poor working man he could never have wielded the influence he did in that persecution.

Such were the two men chosen by the Holy Ghost for the first great foreign mission—men who were peculiar in this, that neither of them received any support from the churches (1 Cor. ix. 6). The command therefore that was given to the Church at Antioch to separate them for the work to which He had called them, did not imply that any provision was to be made for their support, for, although it is said that "when they laid their hands on them they sent them away," in the original it is "they loosed them." They did not send them, they were sent by the Holy Ghost (Acts xix. 4). It does not appear that the Church of Antioch ever gave them anything but their blessing.

During the whole of the time that Paul and Barnabas were together, they neither laboured for their own support, nor received any pecuniary help from the churches. They travelled through Cyprus (where, probably, Barnabas' estates lay) simply as Jewish gentlemen, paying their own expenses, and receiving nothing from the Gentiles (3 John 7).

When they separated, Barnabas took with him John Mark, his nephew, without consulting anyone, and John Mark must either have paid his own expenses, or have been supported by his uncle. Paul took with him Silas, but whether Paul paid for him or not (Acts xx. 34), it was not the Church at Antioch that supported him.

We may also learn a lesson from the choice of places to which Paul was sent. Having received the baptism of the Holy Ghost, he was guided not only in regard to what he was to say (Matt. x. 20), but where he was to go, and we find that he was so directed that he planted churches in the great centres of human power; and when he was lingering too long in the little world of Asia

Minor, and proposing to go to Bithynia, away from the great highway of the world, he was prevented (Acts xvi. 7) and sent off to Europe. The first place in which he planted a church was Philippi, the chief city of Macedonia, then Thessalonica, then Athens, then Corinth, then Ephesus, and at last it was laid upon his heart to go to Rome, which was the metropolis of the world.

But a change came over Paul's circumstances when he entered Europe. Up to this point he had never had occasion either to labour with his hands or to be dependent on others for his support; but after this he had to do both, evidently to show how poor men may also be foreign missionaries.

There are several indications that lead us to suppose that it was Philippi where he was when he received the intelligence that he had lost his all, and it is a remarkable circumstance that his misfortune appears to have produced an impression upon the Philippian Church that was never effaced. To them alone he ever alluded to the circumstance, because they well knew it, that for his Master's sake "he suffered the loss of all" (Phil. iii. 8, R.V.); and although he did not labour with his hands in Philippi, either because they would not allow him to do so, or because his money was not all spent, the Philippians formed an attachment to him that bore very remarkable fruit.

When he left Philippi he went down to Thessalonica, and there the first thing that he did was to seek employment, so that he might not be chargeable to any one, and having found it (1 Thes. ii. 9) he began to preach the Gospel, supporting himself and Silas, who seems to have had no money of his own (Acts xx. 34). The brethren at Philippi, hearing of this, immediately sent him supplies (Phil. iv. 15), and this was probably the first time in his life that he was dependent on the liberality of others. The circumstance seems to have made a deep impression on his mind, and he calls the occasion "the beginning of the Gospel," as if it were the first time that he realised the hardships of his mission.

The supplies that he received from Philippi enabled him not only to give more time to his mission work in Thessalonica, but to go to Athens, and from thence to Corinth; but on arriving at Corinth, the first thing he did was to seek for employment so as to be independent, and he was so fortunate as to find Aquila, a tent-maker, who took him not only into his workshop but into his family, and formed an attachment which lasted for life. But again the Philippians heard of his need and again sent him supplies (2 Cor. xi. 9). From that time he led a life of toil and hardship, either depending on the generosity of others or labouring with his own hands (2 Tim. iv. 13). "To the present hour," he says to the Corinthians, "we both hunger and thirst, and are naked," "and we toil, working with our hands," a very different state of things from the time when he rode with his attendants to Damascus, or when he travelled through Cyprus, with Barnabas and John, as a gentleman.

Mr. Gall then made an appeal to those who were dependent on business, and had received the baptism of the Holy Ghost, to go out as foreign missionaries.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9.

The preliminary prayer-meeting was opened by the singing of a hymn, after which an hour and a half was devoted to prayer and Bible reading, and to brief addresses on the best method of saving souls. The devotional service was conducted by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, and many earnest prayers were offered up from all parts of the Hall, for the speedy shining of the light of the Gospel in the dark places of the earth. The supplications ended, another hymn was sung, and then

Dr. Ziemann delivered a short address, the burden of which was that too much prominence could not be given to prayer as a means to the conversion of all men to God, also the need of individual effort for the salvation of single souls. He pointed out what a large amount of care and preparation was given to the work of preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ, and claimed that the subject of prayer was not one whit less important. Proceeding, he said how foolish it was for us to think lightly of prayer, or to neglect it. Oh, what a prayer meeting this ought to be, if we all realised that the very longings of our hearts and the words of our lips are carried by the Lord Jesus Christ, in his own dear hands, to the presence of the living God. He touched upon the disposition of Christians to consider the evangelisation of the world as something to be accomplished as a whole, and not as the result of the rescue of individual souls. People always talked about saving the world, he said, and he did not remember ever attending a religious Conference where the question of how to save one soul was brought up. As a practical outcome of that meeting, he should like everyone who had attended it to go away feeling none the less strongly that the whole world should be saved, but at the same time more alive to the nearness of themselves to the world, and the great help which they might lend to the consummation of such a noble desire by saving single souls. It was no romantic man who said, "There is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth," and if every Christian would not only experience the joy of saving souls, but would also fully understand that, in each lost one brought to repentance, the yearning heart of Christ also rejoiced, they would find in that one of the most effective stimulants to Christian work. In conclusion, he expressed the earnest hope that God would so work in the hearts of all present that they would each seek and save individual souls, and so satisfy the heart of the Lord Jesus.

Mr. Russell Hurditch followed, remarking that many were apt to overlook the value of individual souls in talking about the need of saving the world; what was really wanted was more "button-hole theology." We have forgotten the universal commission given by God to each and all to save his fellows, and so the work of our salvation was largely delegated to pastors, or teachers, or evangelists. We failed to exercise faith in the power of Him in whom all power both in heaven and earth was vested, to endue us with his Spirit, and so make us the savers of souls, and it was because of this that we looked in vain for the results we hoped to see, and which God had promised. What men needed was a real grip upon the name of Jesus, and if they bore that name in a living faith to a dying world, all the demons of drink and lust and worldliness would fly before it. But alas! alas! thousands of God's people lived as if there were no souls to win; as if they were not to be reservoirs of blessing for others; as if they were not to dispense abroad the life which God had given them. A student once complained to Mr. Spurgeon at the discouragement he felt at not being able to convert more souls to God. "Why," said Mr. Spurgeon, "you surely do not expect converts every time you preach?" "No," replied the student, "I don't expect that, of course." "Then," said Mr. Spurgeon, "that is why you don't get them." How many sermons were preached without the slightest expectation of saving souls, whilst there were numbers of deacons who would pull a very long face if they were asked to meet with those who might be "almost persuaded" at a meeting after the regular service. Do not let Christians in future beat about the bush so much, but ask straight out of each individual, "Are you a Christian? Do you know the Lord Jesus Christ? Are yon living in the enjoyment of God's favour? Have you assurance of salvation?" Not whether they like the preaching or the service. If each one did but travail in birth until Christ should be formed in individual souls, then there would be a blessed flocking to Him of many who had been prayed over and laboured for, until they had been won to Christ.

Mr. MacGill here incidentally remarked that the student to whom the previous speaker had referred had preached side by side with him (Mr. MacGill) in Glasgow; so remarkable had been the effect upon him of Mr. Spurgeon's words, that they had changed his whole life, and he could now point to numberless conversions wrought through him.

Mr. Wilkinson spoke of his work among the Jews, and said that one of the difficulties of bringing them to realise that they were sinners was that they were such Pharisees. Good results, however, had been very plentiful, and were such as to encourage those labouring in the midst of this ancient race to persevere.

Major Tucker, of the Salvation Army, who was attired in the garb worn by natives in India, from which country he has lately returned, said there were two classes into which religious people might be divided: one that expected themselves to do the whole work of soul-saving, and the other that left it altogether to God; but what was really necessary was that all should not only be mighty in prayer, but should also be mighty in action.

Rev. Dr. Robson said that we must not confine ourselves to Mark's version of the great commission to "preach the Gospel to every creature," we must include that of Matthew—to "disciple all nations." If each Christian would centre his attention upon the individual soul that needed the saving power of the Gospel, then a long step would be taken towards fulfilling that sacred command to disciple all the earth.

Mr. Henry Lakin, in a very characteristic speech, said he could endorse what Mr. Hurditch had said about the need for button-hole theology, for the Lord had taught him a lesson which brought home to him the truth of the remark. When he went out on the farm to shoot a rabbit, he endeavoured to be very direct and very personal. One morning before breakfast he shot eighteen wood pigeons, one after another, as they came down from a neighbouring tree to eat the corn. They made a good bundle to carry, but they were shot one by one. That incident reminded him that if souls were to be won they could not be gained over to the Lord altogether at once, but they must be button-holed, they must be dealt with one at a time, and those who sought to win them must go straight to the point, must aim right at the mark, must ask the man or the woman, "Beloved friend, are you saved?" and in a few brief words explain to them God's blessed, simple, glorious plan of salvation. Thus would they win souls for the Master one at a time.

Rev. Mr. Stewart (a returned missionary from China) said that one by one, in the land in which he had laboured, as one by one at home, God was drawing men up from darkness into light. The work of rescue which He had given to the more favoured of the children of men to do had only to proceed in proportion to the facilities now open for its prosecution in China, to make that country one of the brightest examples of the triumph that could be achieved by the Gospel of Christ over the powers of darkness.

Mr. R. C. Morgan: There is no condition of Christian life which has not its parallel in the Bible. Coming, as it were, out of a long captivity, we are called to build the temple of the Lord. We are here to present ourselves before Him, that He may use us in evangelising the world; that through us the nations of the earth may be blessed. Zechariah prophesied to the remnant returned to Jerusalem, and God gave him a series of visions in a single night, which were specially designed to strengthen their hearts, and to fit them for their work. From these we may gather counsel, warning, and encouragement.

(1) He saw a Man, who was the Angel of the Lord, and the Lord of Hosts Himself (Zec. i. 5, 10, 11, 13), riding upon a red horse, and who stood among the myrtle-trees which were in the bottom. In other words, Jehovah-Jesus among the meek and lowly, who are, like myrtle-trees, a sweet savour to God. For "the meek will He guide in judgment, and the meek will He teach his way." This is our first lesson. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart."

(2) We have the world-powers against us—four horns. But God has four carpenters who can fray them away. Think of a Nebuchadnezzar frayed away by a carpenter; Xerxes by another; Alexander by another; Cæsar by another! Above all, Satan frayed away by the Carpenter who died upon the cross!

(3) There is a man with a measuring line to measure Jerusalem, and to mark it out into sections. But "Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls, for the multitude of men and cattle therein. For I, Jehovah, will be a wall of fire round about her, and the glory in the midst of her." Don't measure our Jerusalem, the Church, and mark it out into sects. Let the glory of God be the power in the midst of her, and let Him be the only boundary-wall round about her.

(4) But when the light of God's glory comes into the midst of us it makes us conscious of our sin, and our need of the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, which cleanses us from all sin (1 John i. 7). Therefore, a vision is vouchsafed to Israel through Zechariah in which he sees Joshua the high priest clothed in filthy garments, and Satan accusing him. But it is God that justifieth, for it is Christ that died. Clothe him in change of raiment, for by the blood of Calvary "I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day."

(5) But we may be pardoned and justified, and yet lack power. This Gospel prophet must shadow forth the Holy Spirit as the needed power of God's people. A candlestick and a golden bowl of oil, and seven lamps and seven pipes to each of the seven lamps, and two olive-trees on the right and left sides of the bowl, who are the two sons of oil that stand by the Lord of the whole earth. And this the lesson of it all: "Not by an army, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." In the language of the New Covenant, "I will endow my two witnesses and they shall prophesy. These are the two olive trees and the two candlesticks standing before the Lord of the earth." "Ye are my witnesses" (Rev. xi. 3, 4; Acts i. 8).

(5) The nearer a nation or a man is brought to God, the stricter the judgment of evil. Nadab and Abihu, Ananias and Sapphira, are proofs of this. The prophet, therefore, sees a flying roll, and the thief on the one hand, and the perjurer on the other, is cut off according to it. The thief sins against his neighbour, the perjurer against God. These two men represent all breakers of the two tables of the law. "The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked." We have every one possibilities of every sin within us. "Unite my heart to fear thy name."

(6) Jacob was a bargainer, a trafficker; and one of the crying sins of Israel was "making the ephah small and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit." The prophet sees an ephah, and a woman sitting in it, as at the receipt of custom (compare, walking, standing, sitting, Ps. i.). This is Wickedness. It must be carried away out of the Lord's land, the Holy Land, and set on her own base in the land of Shinar—i.e. Babylon. Rev. xviii. tells the doom of commercial Babylon, "Come out of her, my people: that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

(7) A second vision of chariots, God's messengers of judgment, who quiet his spirit in the north country (Assyria) by executing vengeance on Israel's foes. For "the Lord will avenge his people." He will judge us himself, but he will not let the enemy wantonly help forward the affliction.

(8) Joshua, the high priest, now is crowned, a priest upon his throne. Jesus has made his people kings and priests, and, inasmuch as it is with gold and silver brought from Babylon that the crowns are made with which Joshua is crowned, it is foreshown that in the coming time the nations shall own Jesus Lord. He shall be crowned with many crowns. "I will bring forth my Servant the Branch . . . . . And they that are far off shall come and build in the temple of the Lord."

Truly, the encouragements to his witnesses are great and manifold. Now, if need be, we are in heaviness through manifold temptations. We are brethren and companions in the tribulation and Kingdom and patience in Jesus: but

"The crowning day is coming
By and by."

Rev. W. Mozelle observed that it had been said, "If any man will follow Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily." If men wished to show their love for poor perishing souls, they could not do it more effectually than by putting self in the background, that God might be glorified.

Mr. Langley, having briefly expressed his conviction that many were lost to the fold of Christ by not having been spoken to individually as to whether all was well with their souls, was followed by

Dr. Baedeker, who said, that whilst he would not say one word in disparagement of the efficacy of preaching to numbers, yet the preacher ought so to order his speech as to make his remarks apply to each individual in his audience. After all, it was God who gave the word of saving grace at the right time, and no one, he thought, would for one moment discourage such men as Mr. Moody from speaking to large multitudes. Though a vast number were much benefited by being individually met with, a great many more were comforted by the indirect action upon them of the Word and Spirit of God. However, if all sought to fill that post in the Lord's service for which they felt themselves fitted, the efforts of the whole body of Christians would work harmoniously together for good, and produce a result worthy of Him under whose banner they marched.

Mr. Radcliffe then referred to a passage in John, and several in the Acts, tracing in a short, interesting, and instructive way, the preparation for and progress of the Gospel, in the days of our Lord and of his Apostles.

Mr. John Thomson then took the chair, and introduced to the Conference the subject of which formed the foundation of several addresses. Previous to entering upon this question, prayer and praise were again offered, and then

Rev. Dr. Robson rose to speak of his experience of the wants of India, first asking to be allowed to offer a personal reminiscence. He said: It is now twenty-six years since I entered the ministry, and then I felt the responsibility of the step I was taking. I put to myself the question, What is the field of work before me? and I heard very distinctly the Master's answer, "The field is the world." I then realised that I could not hope to stay at home, but that I must go wherever the Master called me; and after hours of agony and prayer I at last made up my mind to say, "I will go forward; the field is the world." When I had done that I was possessed by the "peace that passeth understanding;" my eye was single, and I saw my way before me. I did not offer for the foreign field; I was asked to go there, and I accepted the invitation at once, much to the astonishment of those who did not know the struggle I had been going through, and nothing that was afterwards said for or against my determination influenced me at all. When once I believed I was called to go, I resolved to do so. I say this to encourage any one who may be struggling in the same way just now; and if you feel the stirring of the Spirit, settle the matter with God before you say a word to any man, and when you have done that, leave all else to his providence, and you will find the work easy.

After being in India twelve or thirteen years, my health broke down so completely that I was told I should never be able to labour in the tropics again. Then I remembered that the field was the world, and so I came home. My labour in the foreign field has shown me that the religion of Christ is for all the world, and looking back upon my work now, I may, perhaps, present some views of it different to those which I might have been able to give to you had I just returned hot from the fray. The subject is, "Our Fellow-subjects in India, and their Needs." This is a touching subject, for the people of India are our fellow-subjects, though not in the same way as we are subjects of the Queen. Latterly some of the representatives of that country have come to this land, to plead their cause before the constituencies of England, and a great deal has been said, pro and con, with regard to their claims. I am not going to enter upon that now, but I will say this, with great intensity of conviction, that if we wish that they should be our fellow-subjects, in the sense of working harmoniously in one kingdom, even of this world, we must supply their great need—need of the Gospel. But although they are our fellow-subjects, yet they require not home missions but foreign missions. There is a distinct difference between these two branches of Christian work, and unless we recognise that difference we do not really comprehend what we have to face.

What is the difference? It lies in the difference of the enemy we have to meet. In this country we have to reckon with irreligion, but in heathen lands our foe is religion. At home, when you have brought a man to face fairly the question, "What must I do to be saved?" you have won half the battle; but when you have got a Hindoo to do so, you have roused the full strength of the enemy. My friend, Mr. Radcliffe, told me last night that the people amongst whom I now work in the North of Scotland are the most strongly intrenched in religious observance and self-righteousness of any he had met with in Great Britain; but I can recall many cases in which those people have humbly acknowledged their need of forgiveness, whereas I have now in my memory the picture of a man in India, who, when I brought him to put the question, "What shall I do to be saved?" replied, "Oh, Krishna will save me," and when I spoke of Christ he grew furious, saying, "Of course Christ is able to save you, but Krishna is able to save me." There was a man as earnest in religion as I was, but he looked to another, and it was years before he came to find that Krishna could not deliver him from sin.

Here we have to struggle against unbelief, but in other lands we have to contend with beliefs which place usurpers upon God's throne. The Hindoos must not be judged simply by their idol worship, for they are the most theological people in the world, and are grounded in a subtle, strong philosophy that permeates the whole of their religion. The first item in a Hindoo's faith is that there is no being but God, and they look upon everything else as simply a delusion. There is no word in their language for the material universe except that delusion. They believe that all the world that is about them and us is but a dream, and that one day we shall wake up and find that the universe is but the baseless fabric of a vision. But what about the soul of man? They hold that the soul of man is God, but owing to its connection with their delusion of anything existing apart from God, it does not know itself to be God, and fancies itself to be something separate; and the great object of the Hindoo religion is to enable its adherents to get quit of this delusion, and realise that they are again God. And so the Hindoo word "salvation" means properly deliverance from fancying ourselves to be separate from God and getting ourselves absorbed in God again.

Now, I dare say you will think this end is arrived at when death comes and the soul is united with God. But the Hindoos say, men both commit sins and perform virtuous actions; that the sinner is not always punished, and the virtuous man not always rewarded; therefore, before the soul can get rid of its bondage and be united to God, it must be born in another existence. If a man is very bad in this life, his soul will, they think, inhabit the form of a serpent, or a dog, or a demon; but if he should have been virtuous, it will live again in a Brahmin, or better still, in a cow. And not only that, they believe that the happiness or otherwise of their present existence is the consequence of what they have done in a previous birth. If a man is born a Brahmin—the highest of all the castes among the Hindoos—it is, in their opinion, because in an antecedent life to that which he now lives, he has been very righteous, and is now reaping the reward; while, on the other hand, a low-caste man is but getting his deserts of some great sin that he has committed. That theory is no mere speculation of philosophers, but is believed in by the people of India as absolute facts, and quite as firmly as we believe that after death there is the judgment.

Before they can get rid of the necessity of being born again, they must pass through an infinite series of new births, and the good and evil actions of their lives must be balanced. In order to do this, two things must be done: they must never fail to observe their caste, and they must be faithful in the worship of their gods. Those are the two great laws for their guidance, the former really constituting the moral law. You have heard a great deal about caste, but unless you have been in the country you cannot realise how great is the distinction between caste and caste. If a man is born a Brahmin, he must do the work of a Brahmin; and if he enters upon anything that is done by an inferior caste, he is leaving a very great amount of virtue unrewarded, and he must be born again in order to receive that reward, though meanwhile he must be punished for breaking his caste. The law of caste forbids those of different castes from eating or drinking with one another, from intermarrying, and, in fact, puts an end to all real social intercourse among the people. A Hindoo may be guilty of murder, or theft, or uncleanness, and he is not considered any worse; but let a Brahmin eat with a man of a lower caste or with a European, and he is looked upon as having committed a sin so heinous that his soul will be sent to hell, or, in other words, to take up its abode in a demon. This shows how it is that there is so little intercourse between the natives of India and Europeans, and that such should be the case is not the fault of the latter, but of the natives themselves. Whilst this barrier remains standing it is impossible that there can be that friendliness and association between the English and the people of India that ought to exist between fellow-subjects, and the only thing that can break it down and weld the two nations in one great commonwealth of citizenship is the Gospel.

Then there is also the worship of the gods. I dare say you will think it strange on the part of the Hindoos, who think that they themselves are God, that they should have to worship other gods; and the philosophy by which they reconcile this seeming incompatibility is somewhat curious. Let me give to you an image, which is often used to explain this in India. The soul of man, they say, is like a drop of water. First of all, the drop of water is in the ocean; it is exhaled, and goes into the clouds; there it is changed into a drop of rain, falls to the ground, is absorbed into some plant, and forms the juice of the plant, thus always containing water. The plant is eaten by an animal, which may be eaten by another animal, or by man, and the drop of water is again exhaled by the breath and goes up to the clouds. Thus, though it takes various different forms, it still remains water, until at last it finds its way back to the ocean. Applying this process to the soul, the Hindoo argues that it goes through similar transformations, but still remains God; the use of the gods being that they, by being worshipped, may be compelled to absorb into them the persons and the merit or dismerit of their adorers (who do not expect to become all at once like Krishna), and so give them emancipation from their connection with this delusion or universe.

A great difficulty in the way of the spread of the Gospel in India is the almost impossibility of making Hindoos feel the necessity of holiness. I never had any difficulty whatever in getting them to acknowledge that Jesus Christ was perfectly pure and holy, and that their own gods were vile and abominable; but when I had done that I was no nearer the end in view, for they would just say, "That is true; but the pure one may do for you and the impure for us. A drop of water will find its way into the ocean in a muddy stream as well as in a clear one." This feeling is, of course, the logical result of Pantheistic teaching, which tends to make people look upon evil as just as great a means of salvation as good. There is a sect in India that actually does teach that drunkenness is one way of worshipping the gods. Although the Hindoos are, as a rule, very temperate, I have read in Indian books the statement that those who get drunk are pleasing to certain gods, who themselves are drunk. It is an awful thing to think of, and to see how the conception of God, which ought to lift us up to holiness, has been seized upon by the devil in the shape of Pantheism to draw us down.

Of course I do not deny that there are natives in India who seek the good as well as the evil. I have known Hindoos whose lives have been pure and truthful, as well as those whose lives have been very wicked. A distinguished scholar in this country has written an essay on the question, "Are the Hindoos Truthful?" and the answer is that if you can tell to what caste they belong you may form some idea of what to expect from them. The sad thing is that those Hindoos who believe in the obligatory nature of truth on themselves, do not consider it obligatory on the part of those of another caste. Some castes of Brahmins always speak the truth, and talking once to one of them, I asked why he did not try to persuade those of a certain other caste not to tell lies. The reply was, "It is their caste; they could not get on unless they told lies."

Now, the only way to remedy this state of things is to preach the Gospel to those people. I believe in the Holy Ghost, and with that belief strong in me, I am convinced that there is nothing in Hindooism that is beyond the power of God to conquer. Filled with the power of the Holy Spirit we can do anything in India, and experience has shown that we can do anything. I would like to emphasise very strongly that we need to go to India not merely to preach the Gospel, but to make the people Christ's disciples; and when they are brought to Jesus Christ they will indeed be a noble race. As a matter of fact there has been greater progress made in India during the last twenty years than in any other country. A great deal is thought of the progress made in Madagascar, but there has actually been a greater increase in the strength of the Christian Church in India than in that island, which shows that we simply need to go on with our work of missions in faith, and to increase our agencies, and results will not be wanting. I think we have been playing at missions for a long time now, but God has given us twice the reward we deserve. Over the grave of Dr. Caddy in an island in the South Seas there is written, "When he came to this island there was not a single Christian in it; when he left it there was not a single heathen." There is a definite result; and what was done there may be achieved in every country in the world. I was much struck some time ago by a remark made by Mr. MacGill, who, in speaking of evangelisation, said that an engineer had told him that nothing was impossible in engineering, it was merely a matter of detail; if one detail after another could be got through, then everything could be done in engineering. If that is so of a mere science, much less is it impossible when done for Christ. It is just a matter of detail; and if each one seeks faithfully to carry out the detail the Master has given, we may look for the speedy coming of the time when the record that is written over that grave in the island of the South Seas shall be written over India and China, and in every land where the power of God has been and still is.

Major-General Haig: We have in India more than 250 millions of people whom we may call our fellow-subjects, for they are really and truly subjects of the Queen. The remaining forty or fifty millions are the subjects of the feudatory States, in each of which we have a Resident, without whose permission nothing whatever can be done; but if any one of these feudatory princes misgoverns his State he can be deposed, as was actually the case during the Viceroyalty of Lord Northbrook. For all these millions, who are practically our fellow-subjects, we are doubly responsible before God. In the first place, they are all either heathen or Mohamedans. About 200 millions of them are Hindoos, and the remaining 50 millions are Mohamedans. There are only about one million of Christians, which is an insignificant fraction compared with the figures I have just mentioned. We have subdued the country in the most perfect manner, and we are responsible before God for the welfare of its people. We cannot put this thought aside. We may ignore the remainder of the heathen world if we will, but these 250 millions of India we cannot set aside; we must feel that we are responsible before God for them and for their salvation.

What is the spiritual provision that we as a Christian people are now making for the people of India? Let us just for one moment remember the provision that we make for our own spiritual life at home. In England we have 20,000 clergymen of the Church of England, and at least as many more ministers of the different Nonconformist denominations. Then for each one of these clergymen and ministers you must allow at least seven additional classes of Christian workers, like city missionaries, Sunday-school teachers, visitors, Biblewomen, and every conceivable form of paid and unpaid Christian labourers. Taking simply the clergymen and ministers who are specially ordained for this work, we have at least 40,000 in this little island ministering to the religious wants of 26 millions of people. Now, let us look to British India. What have we got there? Six hundred and forty ministers. Please note these facts. The very first thing to do in every case in which we wish to get right impressions is to lay hold of facts. The facts with regard to the heathen world at large are very few and very simple, but of enormous power. We send to India, where we have been these 200 years, 640 ministers. Is there not something monstrously wrong? "Well," you may say, "surely there are some native ministers." Yes, there are about as many more native ministers now as those we have sent, but then the greater part of them are pastors; very few of them are actually doing missionary work, and you cannot therefore count them as part of your missionary force. All our ideas on this matter are wrong; our ideas of numbers and magnitude are all wrong. We must completely rid ourselves of our present notions regarding India, and on this subject our best position would be right down in the dust before God. If our experience in the past has had no other effect but to humble us before God, let us heartily thank Him even for that.

What is the spiritual condition of these millions? I am not going to enlarge on the differences between Hindooism and Mohamedanism, nor am I going to ask what has been the effect on the temporal condition of these people of the carrying of Christianity to them. No, when we come to look at this question we want to look at it as Christ sees it; we want to look at it from the point of view of eternity, and the question for us, with regard to those 250 millions, is this, What is to be their eternity? In other words, we have to ask ourselves the question, which I have put to myself over and over again in India, when I have had to lay some poor fellow in his grave, "Where will they go? These 250 millions, where are they going? What is to be their future, what is to be their condition in the world beyond the grave?" Oh, tremendous question! Did you ever try to answer it? Did you ever dare to face it? My dear friends, we need in this matter to ask God to strengthen us by his Spirit in the inner man, lest reason and everything else should reel and go down. And yet we must look at this question, we must get alone with it and our Bible, and we must answer it. I will tell you my answer to it. My feeling is, that where the Word of God is not absolutely and perfectly explicit, it is not for man to dogmatise; but this, at least, is clear to me—that the future of all this wide region is very, very dark. I see no ray of hope. I read Paul's Epistle, and I see him preaching to the heathen that they must be saved. Saved from what? He speaks of the last crying sin of the Jews forbidding the word to be spoken to the Gentiles that they might be saved. Saved from what? Ah, my dear friends, look at it if you dare, if you can—but there it is. It is an awful thing to contemplate, but they perish. That is what God says. However you and I may feel about this matter, in our poor, narrow, miserable, selfish hearts, the question of questions is, How does the great God feel about it? As He looks down from his throne, how does He feel about these lost ones? Does He look down at all upon this little mite of a planet of ours? Does it attract his notice at all in the vast universe? Surely if He regards it at all, it will only be when empires are crashing, and those vast movements are taking place which alter the whole world's history. What does He say? "From heaven did the Lord behold the earth; to hear the groaning of the prisoners; to loose those that are appointed to death." "Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one is forgotten of God?" I ask, how does God feel about it? The answer is, God loves them all. There is not one of them forgotten before God. While you and I cannot look beyond what our newspapers put before us, and while we are taken up with what goes on round about here in Manchester, or at the furthest what is going on in England, the eye of the great God is going to and fro amid all those countless millions, not one of whom is forgotten, each soul of them an object of the tenderest solicitude and of the utmost interest to the great God that made it. And, as they pass over and go down into the darkness, the heart of the great God is wrung for them; there is not one of them that God has not loved, there is not one of them for whom Christ did not die. There was not one of them but God would have saved—whom the infinite heart of the infinite God is not yearning over with unutterable compassion. There is not one of them that goes down into the darkness but the very tears of Christ are, as it were, falling upon his head. Shame upon us, when we look at the wonderful, inconceivable love of God towards these lost ones, and look then at our own hearts. God has shown that there is nothing that He will not do, or give, or suffer that men may be saved; and yet, in spite of the pouring out of all that infinite wealth of love, men are going down to death because you and I will not tell them of the Gospel. That is our position before God in this matter.

Yet, while we have done so little, we are nevertheless doing much in India; or rather man is doing deplorably, absurdly, ridiculously little, though God has been doing much. Oh, how gloriously, how tenderly He encourages us to take a step forward in his service! What are the actual results? I think the few figures I shall mention will surprise a good many here. For the last thirty years we have been able to collect the actual results of Christian missions in India. Every ten years a census is taken by the missionaries of the churches in India, and so the exact numbers of Christian communicants, men, women, and children, is known. Taking the last three decades the annual increase was 10,000 in the first, 10,000 in the second, and in the tenth year ending 1881 the annual increase in members of Christian Churches was 20,000. Those are undoubted truths, the actual results of mission work in India. Though we have so much reason to humble ourselves before God, yet we have abundant cause to praise Him for what He is doing. It seems very encouraging to see the Church increasing at that rate, but the outlook is not so encouraging when the actual increase of the population is considered. For many centuries before we took India under our charge the population was very nearly stationary, but now that they are being governed peacefully and quietly the Indians have become a prolific race, and the increase of the population is very rapid. The actual increase of the population is now at the rate of two or two and a half millions a year; yet, supposing we only say one million, allowing for the epidemics that sweep away such large numbers, we have still these two facts confronting us—of the Christian Church increasing at the rate of 10,000 and the heathen population increasing at the rate of 1,000,000 a year.

Then let us look at what we are doing in the way of education. At the present moment the Government is expending something slightly less than two millions a year on education in India, and the number of pupils in the Government schools is nearly three millions, including those in the Christian schools, who number about 160,000—a very small fraction of the whole. There is quite a thirst for education throughout India. A few months ago I saw a letter from the Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, in which he said, "Education is spreading like wild fire. The Hindoos are already beginning to tax themselves for education, and that will be the most favourite tax in the country." But observe what is being done. The Government are in earnest in this matter of education. They are going in for the education of these 250 millions, but it will be a Godless education. There is not even the Bible in the Indian school; it is utterly put aside, and the education given is absolutely secular. What is to be the result? Would you here in Manchester like all the schools of the country to be places in which the name of God is never mentioned? Suppose that to go on for twenty years, what sort of a population would you have? How would our rulers like to look at the problem which they would then have to face? Supposing all England was determined to have nothing but secular teaching in the schools, and there is not a single man who would not shrink from the prospect which fifty years of such dealing with the children of the country would reveal—the prospect of anarchy, and everything else that is evil. Now, that is just what we are doing for India; we are educating 250 millions there in an utterly Godless manner. What will be the result when those people begin to feel their strength, when their intellect is aroused by education, when they begin to chafe under the paternal despotism under which they have been so long and happily ruled? What will be the vast social and political movements that will take place among 250 millions of people, whose faith in their own ancestral religion has been destroyed by their education, and to whom we have given nothing else? A statesman, however worldly, would be appalled at the prospect of having to deal with such a people, and yet that is what we have got before us.

Just a word about the needs of India. You say we want to send out missionaries by hundreds and hundreds. Quite true; but I won't put that first. Just let me say that all I have been saying to you about missionary work, and all the interest I take in it, is derived from actual experience in India. I am not a missionary, though thank God I have been permitted to do some missionary work. I have not derived my ideas about that work from missionary reports or from missionary meetings. I know what the work is. I know native Christians; some of them I carry in my heart day by day as dear brethren in Christ. Therefore I think I may say I speak to you with a perfectly unprejudiced mind of what I have seen and what I know. The first great need of India, at the present moment, is a great outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the native churches. What do these Christian churches amount to? There are one million Christians in India, half Roman Catholics and half Protestants. We speak about the small number of European missionaries going out there, but you have in India half a million of Protestant native Christians, of whom one hundred and forty-five thousand are communicants. Now just notice what an army of workers you have in India if the power of God came down upon them, if the mighty love of God for the poor heathen were shed abroad in their hearts. The natives of the country must understand their fellow-subjects as you and I cannot understand them. Put the truth before them and they will work wonders, for they are on the spot. But the first great need is the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon these native brethren and sisters. Do let us lay that before God. Do let us go away with this resolution in our hearts, to cry to Him to pour out his Spirit on the native churches. If we did that we might then see a great turning of the people of India to God.

There are noble men among those native Christians. Some three or four years ago I was at a little mission with which I was connected, about a thousand miles distant from Tinnevelly, and I was very anxious that a new station should be formed. I was aware that it was of no use writing home for men, and I thought to myself, "Why should not the Tinnevelly Church send us men?" I wrote to Bishop Sargent, and he laid it before the native Church Council, for the churches there are self-governed, and have their councils and committees. The Council replied, "We will send you two men, and, what is more, we will pay them." One man died almost as soon as he arrived; the other wanted a companion, for was in the midst of lonely jungles, eighty miles from the nearest mission station. He wrote to have someone sent to him, but the country in his neighbourhood is very unhealthy, and no one would go. At last an old man of sixty years of age said, "If nobody else will go, I will go." And though this old man had never been outside his own little village, he at once prepared to set out on a journey of nearly a month. He reached the head-quarters on the river, and there it was found that he had been in such a hurry to leave, that he had not brought the necessary clothes with him. They tried to persuade him to wait until his box came, but he said, "Let me go; give me a guide, I must go." Some months afterwards, when a missionary went up that way, the people of the district said, "Who is that strange old man, who whenever he comes has only two words to speak to us in our language?" The old man was a perfect stranger to the place, and being a Tamil man he did not know their language; but he had learnt the words, "Believe in Jesus," and he said them on every possible occasion. He spent about a year there, but at last got very ill, and he had to be sent back to his native place, which he had hardly reached ere he died. I say that old man laid down his life for Christ. I often wish I could put up a tombstone, or some memorial to him in that wild country, and just write upon it, for the people to read, these words, "He laid down his life."

In conclusion, let me speak to the young men here. It astonishes me—I do not know how to account for it—not that you do not go out to the heathen world, but that you do not take an interest in the different societies and churches to which you belong. The fact is, societies cannot get men. But, oh, what a glorious life is a missionary's! I recollect that great meeting in Exeter Hall, when there was a University man speaking on the platform, and behind him some 50 more University men. He himself had been out in Africa, and knew something of the work, and he said to his fellows, "It seems to me that after you have gone through all your training at Cambridge, it would be very slow work for you to settle down in a little English parish on £300 a year. Ah, friends, there are millions dying with the love of God yearning over them. Won't you go to their help? Are there not some here to-day who will say, 'Lord, here am I; send me.'"

Mr. Wakefield MacGill said that as one result of the Conference there was a lady present who asked for prayer on her behalf, as she was willing to leave a very important work of Christ in this country to serve God among the heathen, if a sphere of distinct usefulness could be opened to her. Mr. MacGill suggested the desirability of establishing a centre for mission intelligence in this country, belonging to no particular organisation, but being the focus of all knowledge relating to the missions of the whole world. He was certain that such a centre would be of manifest use to the cause of Christ.

Rev. W. J. Wilkins: Of course I endorse every word that has been said respecting the needs of India and the claims of the people of India upon our sympathy. But I think, perhaps, a wrong impression will be gained by those who are here, if they imagine that the only good we can point to as the result of all the work of the past in India, is that which may be tabulated in the reports presented from time to time by the various missionary societies. I thank God that when the census was taken in 1881 we could see what mighty results had been achieved; but I can bear testimony to this fact, that whilst we may have 500,000 Protestant Christians throughout India, this is not at all the whole truth. We have had many, if one can judge of the sincerity of heart and faith of other people, whose names are not found on Church registers, who may not even regularly attend places of worship, but who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and trust Him as the only means of their salvation. General Haig has referred to the Government institutions where no religious instruction is given—that is, no direct religious instruction. But in the text-books approved by the Government, the students in those schools and colleges read Milton and other writers, which necessitates their reading the Bible, that they may understand the teaching of those great authors. Then in the towns and villages there are the mission schools. It is my firm conviction that we have more Christians whose names are not found in our Christian registers than we have Christians whose names are there; that amongst the Hindoos there are multitudes who, though they have not been baptized, are yet truly trying to serve the living God. A few years ago, in Calcutta, there was a gentleman who had a number of Hindoos staying at his house. He was himself a Hindoo, and regularly, from Sunday to Sunday, they met for the reading of the Word of God, and every month they used to partake of what they termed the Lord's Supper. I spoke to that gentleman again and again, urging on him the necessity of openly identifying himself with the Christian Church, because of the great influence he would exert from his high social position in the Hindoo community. He said to me, "Have you not in England Christians called 'Friends?'" I said, "We have." He said, "Do they baptize their children? Do they observe the Lord's Supper?" I said, "Not, of course, in the way in which we do." "But still," he said, "you recognise them as Christian brethren, do you not?" replied, Of " course we do." Then he said, Why cannot you recognise me as a Christian brother?" There were eighteen or twenty other Hindoo gentlemen in the same position, not one of whom had been baptized, but as far as one could judge they were Christians, weak it may be and far off, but still following Christ. And what was true of them is true of a very great number scattered throughout the country. It has been my work amongst other things to itinerate, to go out into the country villages and districts of Bengal, there to preach the Gospel, and I scarcely ever went into a village, much less a large town, without finding some who had been trained in our schools, and those who had been trained in Government institutions, who would boldly say in the presence of their fellow-countrymen, "We have no more faith in Hindooism than you have; we read the Bible, we pray to God, we love Jesus, we try to be what He was."

It is most blessed to see how the life of Jesus Christ affects the Hindoo mind. They are familiar with beautiful moral lessons in some of their books. If you study their works you will find here and there lessons as beautiful as many of the lessons recorded in the New Testament. But side by side with these lessons which come from the mouth of some one or other of the deities, as a rule they have the lives and biographies of these gods and goddesses; so that it has come to be proverbial amongst the Hindoos that whilst the teaching of the gods is good and worthy of being listened to, the example that the gods have set is bad and unworthy of being copied. When they read the life of Jesus Christ, and become acquainted with his teaching, they say, "Here is something utterly distinct from anything that we find in our own books; we have beautiful lessons in them, but the lives of the gods are directly opposed to those lessons. In the New Testament the life of Jesus Christ is in perfect accord with the lessons that He taught." And this it is, I believe—the story of Jesus Christ's life and suffering and death, and the manifestation of God's love in Him—that is touching the hearts of these educated Indians. Many of them have had a good Christian training in our schools many others have read the Bible for themselves, and it seems to me that what is wanted is not only prayer—and I sympathise heartily with the prayer—for the outpouring of the Christian spirit on the Church of India, but that we should pray also for those multitudes who have come to see that is their duty to be Christians, but, owing to what they would have to suffer if they were openly to decide for Christ by being baptized, are disciples secretly for fear of their brethren. The example of such men tells marvellously upon the more ignorant and the lower classes, when, in the presence of their neighbours and acquaintances, they boldly declare themselves as believers in Jesus Christ, when they state openly that they read the Bible and find it infinitely superior to any of their own books. As soon as they take that course, the common people come to see that there is far more in Christianity than they had imagined, and my conviction is this, and it is one held by those who best know the natives of India, that the ground has been thus prepared for far greater accessions to the Christian Church than ever has been seen in the past. Surely that is an encouragement for us to go on. I do hope that one great result of this Conference will be that we shall see throughout this and other Christian countries as we have never done before, that the world is for Christ. I confess that I came here, after a long residence in India, with somewhat restricted notions. I thought India was the world, but I have found that there is a larger world than even India.

Let me say one word in reference to the work amongst the women in India. Jesus Christ says, "Preach the Gospel to every creature." If the women of India are to be reached, they can only be reached, according to the present state of society, by Christian women. I have preached the Gospel hundreds upon hundreds of times to men in Calcutta, but I could almost count on my fingers the occasions when I have spoken the Gospel to the women. A woman would not consider it modest to be seen in a congregation of men, and in the villages they are so timid that they run away immediately at the approach of a white man. That is the state of things among the masses of the people. But I should like to speak now more with respect to Calcutta. Six years ago, at a Missionary Conference held there, one lady said that she had permission to enter into two Hindoo homes, for the simple purpose of carrying the Gospel there—that is, without giving secular instruction as a sort of reward, to go simply to read the Bible and speak about Christ. We thought that was a marvellous sign of progress, and one for which we should thank God. In the report of one lady in connection with our Society last year, she tells us that there were 300 Hindoo homes to which she could carry throughout the year the message of the Gospel. In six years progress such as this is seen in India. We have far more Hindoo houses now open, waiting to receive Christian ladies, who bring the knowledge of Christ, and of his love, than we have ladies to send there. Here is a work which it seems to me calls for the sympathy of all Christian women, and one which is a most important branch of our work in India.

Major Tucker then described the work being carried on by the Salvation Army in India. He said that he believed not only in proclaiming the Gospel to the heathen, but in making them Christians. Though he had only been a missionary three years he could tell much from what he had seen with his own eyes of the power of God working upon the hearts of the unconverted, and could thank God for the success which had attended the efforts of the Army. In point of numbers there was every reason for gratitude. He should never forget the night when 130 natives clustered round him all weeping on account of their sins, and seeking salvation through the precious blood of the Lamb. In one glorious week thousands, he believed, were brought to a knowledge of their need of forgiveness, and ere the services, which extended over a few months, were closed, thousands more had found peace. So great was the eagerness of the heathen to turn from their old ways that they almost overwhelmed the little band of missionaries. As he had always looked upon it as his business, not only to get a man saved, but to keep him saved, he had reluctantly to stem the torrent, for he could not hope to take care of and himself make real soldiers of the Cross of so many.

In enforcing the need for all missionaries in India to place themselves in full sympathy with the natives, the speaker remarked that the greatest compliment the General had ever paid him was when he said, "Tucker, you are really a white native." I am really a white native, continued Mr. Tucker, and the success which God has given me has resulted not so much from my assuming the guise of a native, for I do not place any reliance upon this costume that I wear, as it is only an outward and visible sign of an inward spiritual grace, but from my having a native heart within me that yearns after the people. When it begins to beat within me a responsive beat arises in the heart of the native; the two attract each other as a magnet, and when they meet the power of God comes down and souls are saved. Mr. Tucker went on to chronicle many other encouraging successes he had met with. Turning from the number of conversions to the lasting or fleeting nature of them, he said: It is not my desire to get hundreds of people to pretend to be converted. What I want is to get Christ into their hearts, and unless I do that my work shall be burnt up like stubble in the day of judgment. With regard to whether people really understood what they said when they claimed to have found salvation, Major Tucker quoted several of the descriptions given by natives of their condition after conversion, proving that they had grasped to the full the whole plan of redemption. He further expressed what feelings of delight and astonishment he had experienced at the eagerness of the people to listen to the Gospel, and said that on his last missionary journey in the north of India he had to travel night and day in order to comply with the entreaties that reached him to go and preach in various districts. Recounting some of the wonderful opportunities that had been vouchsafed to him of making known the Gospel in places that had always been considered impossible of access to Christians, he mentioned that on one occasion when he was walking into Umritza without a farthing in his pocket, and expecting to sleep, as he had often done before, under a tree, he was accosted by a Sikh soldier who knew him, and took him to the Golden Temple of Umritza, and prevailed upon one of the priests, who was his friend, to shelter him within the sacred building. Thus did he penetrate to a place where probably no Christian had ever been allowed before, and in the morning he had gathered round him a group of persons who, instead of engaging in their usual heathen rites, listened to him whilst he unfolded the message of salvation. He had also managed to find his way to rich Mohamedan ladies, and talk to them as to the welfare of their souls.

He then described his method of intercourse with the natives, which was to be as much like them in habits of living as possible, and to show that though the colour of his skin was different, yet at heart he was one with them. What was wanted to carry on the work of God amongst them was not money so much as good, faithful men who had been baptized with the Holy Ghost. For himself he felt beautifully independent of money. He followed the custom of the Fakirs, and begged his way from door to door; and though the people had little or no gold or silver, both Hindoos and Mohamedans gave him food willingly enough, which was all he required. The advantage of this plan was that it afforded him an opportunity of entering the native houses, and studying the character of the inmates, thereby enabling him to understand their spiritual needs more fully and to administer to them more effectually than if he lived apart, and mixed among them only at intervals. It also enabled him to speak the words of life to the native women, who would assemble in groups with their offerings of food, and then he found his opportunity of giving in exchange that food for the soul of which they seemed so anxious to partake. All that was needed for successful mission work among the heathen was a heart and soul baptized with the Holy Ghost, and then, no matter how ignorant a man might be of worldly accomplishments, he would succeed in saving sinners by the power of God within him. It was not the clever men who were needed for missions, so much as good men, with hearts burning with love for their brethren still in darkness, with the Holy Ghost strong within them; and though they might never learn a single syllable of the language of those amongst whom they laboured, yet they would save and keep saved the natives of India or Africa or China simply because they were natives themselves at heart, and endued with power from on high to the salvation of souls.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

CHINA.

Rev. W. S. Swanson, a Scotchman keen and shrewd, powerful physically and intellectually, gave a most stirring address, to which we cannot do justice. We shall endeavour to supply this lack at another time. He ridiculed the notion that the Chinese were just a queer set of people with long pigtails and squint eyes. No question can compare with this Chinese question. The longer I live among the Chinese, said he, the more I feel how little I know about them. The only way to get at their hearts is to get behind their language, which is no small matter, I can assure you. Some races are dying out, but the Chinese cannot be wiped out. They are a standing quantity in the world. This Chinese factor is pressing for attention in America. It is not going to be wiped out, do what you like. Go through the world, and you will not find any heathen empire and heathen people that have the backbone that the Chinese possess. The missionary question in China is the missionary question of to-day. Fourteen months ago a great statesman in France remarked that the Chinese were a quantity not to be reckoned on. I wonder what he thinks about them to-day. What have they done for him? They have made him the most despised man in France. Events tremble in the balance to-day which will make China a mighty factor in British history. There is talk of Chinese rivers being opened up for foreign trade. China is to become conterminous with a new possession of this country.

China is bound to be a most important political factor in the events of the world.

But China is a heathen country. What is heathenism? I dare not lift the veil. You cannot have it in any country where there is any amount of living Christianity. It is rotten; it goes to the root of all that is fair and beautiful; it is sketched by Paul in Rom. i. That is Chinese heathenism. China is going through the world in the stream of its emigration, and that stream is carrying on its bosom this diabolic heathenism, polluting everything it touches.

America has said by her actions that if we cannot rise to the privilege God will confer upon us in connection with this mission in China, they will. The people are not intellectually equal to us, but are by no means the poor, mean lot of creatures some people would have us think all heathens are. Such people will not have such an idea if they go to China and see for themselves. As I have said, to work in China you must get behind the language of the people. We are not working on a Christian plane with centuries of Christian teaching behind. The natives have no Christian idea to work upon. You must think in the way the Chinese think. I am more a Chinese than a Scotchman. This work can only be carried out under the reviving power of God's blessed Spirit. Missionaries must adapt themselves to the thinking habits of the Chinese. The longer I lived in China the more I respected the people, and the more I knew of their heathenism the more I deplored it.

I went out to China in 1859, and saw the mission in its early difficulties. The man who trained me was Rev. Wm. Burns. His advice was, "Use all your common-sense; bring it to bear on all the details of your work." When I knew a little Chinese I wanted to go and speak, but he told me to stop where I was and learn the language thoroughly. "Spare no labour, spare no pains." I thank God that he ever gave me such advice.

When I got to China I could have gathered all the visible Christianity in my district in a room much less than this. Now there are over 100 churches and stations planted there, representing various English societies. There have been gathered into Church membership the largest number of natives that has been obtained in any part of China. My hope is to see the work carried on by China itself. The Chinese when they lay hold of an idea never let it go, so that if we can only get them to take this work to heart it will prosper. I have never been so hopeful as I am to-day when I look back on the past. I expect and pray for success, and am sure of it. But I have not come here to tell you all is sunshine. We need the best men we can get to go out. The Chinaman has brains and knows how to use them, and we must make use of the best means to get at him through men and women fired with the Holy Ghost. I am not come here to tell you of your duty; a foreign mission offers you a privilege. What have foreign missions done for the world? What do commercial men owe to them? May God make this question a greater burden than ever on you. Our success so far is due to prayer. Pray for us, brethren. Take this question home with you, and do pray for us; if you do, I am certain that we shall know about it in China.

Rev. Sylvester Whitehead said: I have laboured ten years amongst the Chinese in the province of Canton. I was acquainted with a dialect that gave me access to 30,000,000 of people, which number forms but part of a land that is a home for one-third of the human race. They had laws, &c., &c., 2000 years before there was an Anglo-Saxon. In other lands we have gone to the untutored savage, in China we have to deal with those whose knowledge makes them doubly blind. The language is exceedingly difficult. One divine is said to have stated that the devil made the Chinese language for the purpose of keeping the Gospel out. But when we come to examine it, it proves to be the most magnificent missionary instrument on the earth. Although people from various parts of China cannot understand each others' dialect, yet every Chinaman can read his own language. Chinamen, all over the world, can read one kind of print. The English language reaches more than one hundred millions; the Chinese can reach eighty million homes, and four hundred millions of hearts in the mother-country and the provinces.

Another difficulty is the tenacity with which they cling to their ancient systems, &c. This is an immense difficulty, but this same tenacity is one of the excellencies that will give firmness to the Church when it is formed. When wood is chosen for carving on, it is not the softest that is picked, but hard oak, that will carry the marks for ever. So it is with a Chinaman. When you have converted a Chinaman—a most difficult task—he is a convert when it is done. I need only refer to the martyr who, last autumn, rather than burn incense before idols preferred to die for Christ. Another difficulty is, the people live together in clans or tribes. Some villages are inhabited by people all of one surname. Some are willing but cannot join because of the whole family or clan, and it is only safe to be converted when the head of the clan is favourable. But once the truth is spread whole clans will come over together. The elder of a village has been converted, and the whole village has come over with him. If the work goes on in this fashion, we shall see a nation born in a day.

Another difficulty is the great systems of religion that prevail. Two of them were instituted centuries before the birth of Jesus Christ; they are three of the mightiest systems of religion that the world has ever known; but even these have kept the people from barbarity and savagery, and seem to yield to us some advantage. The old Chinese classics embody something that points to God and helps the Christian missionary very much. Of course, we must work a long time, and patience must be severely tried. How rapid will be the onspread of Christian truth when once the people are moved. At present Romans i. is but too true a type of the real life in Canton to-day. It is vile in the extreme; learned, yet ignorant. China does not ask the Gospel, it is too far gone for that; but her dumb appeals and her dying lips cry out. Now the nation is stirring up. Now is the time. To my thinking, they will be the last field that will decide the destinies of the world.

Rev. Robert Stewart, of Foo Chow, remarked that twenty-five years ago the result of ten years' work was five lives lost, and only three converts. But was all this waste? Was the ointment that the woman poured on the feet of her Saviour wasted? No. Nor were these lives. What has God done in the last twenty-five years? He has multiplied these three converts into 6000. Last year there were on an average fifty adult baptisms every week in our own districts, seven baptisms every day. Men are brought home bleeding and dying because they are Christians. I have seen a man hanging outside the town because he had been preaching the blessed Gospel of Christ, and for saying he must preach as long as he had life. The choice before him was life if he denied Christ, or death if he refused. If we Christians but knew what God is doing in China, we should be shamed into doing more. Any foreigner can now travel to any part of China—man or woman—without fear. The women are doing even more than the men. The country is wide open, but who is going in? That is the question you and I have to settle.

Mr. T. W. Pigott, of the China Inland Mission: It has been my joy and privilege to work and travel for six years in North China. I only wish that I could transport you there and show you those Chinese, whom I can truly say I love, and to whom it is my hope and desire before long to return, and again to give the precious Gospel message. I do not know much of South China, but have travelled over a good part of the north, from Manchuria to the borders of Kansuh. I could take you to one friendly city or hospitable household after another, where you would have a kindly welcome, and you would find scarce so much hindrance in preaching as you might meet with any day on the streets of Manchester or some other English town. As we journeyed backwards and forwards over the country, from one town to another, this was our experience: every here and there we found one who had received a Gospel or other book, who would eagerly seek to learn from us more about the great message which it contained; or perhaps, a solitary Christian, who would plead with us to stay and preach the Gospel to their friends.

China needs all the talent that we can send there, for they are—as preceding speakers have already told you—a clever and shrewd people; but what we want more than all is the love of Christ in loving hearts—men and women of all kinds of Christian gifts, who will go and love them, and live with them. Let a Chinaman really feel that you love him, and he will love you. I have found it so; and when some time ago lying dangerously ill, I was tended as tenderly by a Chinese Christian as could be. He brought his bed in by night, and lay beside me on the floor, and would be up and at my side in a minute if I wanted anything.

About four years of my time was spent in Tai-yuan Fu, the capital of the Shansi province, and there we had many modes of work, amongst others an opium refuge. As we find the opium traffic, and the forcing of the drug on China by the English, one of our greatest hindrances, so we have found the curing of opium smokers one of our most successful modes of work. Amongst others there was a Mr. Fan, who lived near Ping-yang Fu, in the south of the province. He was interested and saved while being cured of opium-smoking, and the missionary, Mr Drake, used to ride over twenty miles and back every week to teach him to read. After some time he invited Mr. Drake to his house, and brought in about fourteen of his friends. The whole party stayed with him while being cured of opium-smoking or drinking. Mr. Drake slept on a brick stove bed with these men, and often at night, as the craving came on, they would get up and sing or pray, seeking help from God; for while helping them with medicine we seek to lead them to look to Him for deliverance, and so hope to lead them on to a true faith in Him. The result of a month of such work was that several were saved, and Mr. Fan's faith greatly strengthened, so that he became an earnest voluntary worker, spending energy and means in the Gospel cause and working in the neighbouring villages.

God saw fit to try his faith much shortly afte this, for when on a visit to the missionary a wol carried off one of his little boys. There ar many children there who bear scars on their faces from the attacks of these ferocious beasts. His neighbours said the gods were angry because he was following "the foreign devils," as they call us. This was a severe test, as you may the better understand if I tell you of the great superstition of one man, who with his shop-comrades was studying Christian books, when one day as he was reading he got a toothache. As he went on he got worse; he thought that there must be something unlucky in the books, and for many years would not read them. Poor Fan had a far severer test than this, and although it was repeated a second time his faith still stood the test. A second time he went to join the Christian meeting, and the second son was taken in the same way. God allowed him to be tried, but blessed him too, and his zeal and love quite refreshed me when I met him a year ago last May at a gathering of 100 men and women who met under an awning in a courtyard near Ping-yang for a day of meetings.

This was one of the most refreshing sights that I have seen in China; they were fine, stalwart fellows, and earnest and hearty in their zeal. Perhaps thirty of them were baptized, but the others had put away their idols and expressed a desire to be Christians. I asked one in how many villages there were such, and he counted up twenty-seven; and although we could by no means say these were all converted, yet there is great reason to hope and to praise God who has done such great things. I want you to pray for these people and for poor Mr. Fan, for I have just heard that he has been taken before the Yamen, or magistrate, on a false charge, and received 200 blows on one leg, for no other reason than his zeal for Christ. Pray for them, friends, and for the other native Christians, that they may stand firm and true to Christ.

Let me add a few words about the vast regions to the north and north-west of China proper. Mongolia is only slightly touched by missionary effort, and with no missionary resident there. Chinese Tartary, the large provinces of Ili, Koko Nor, Songaria, Kashgar, and Chinese Thibet, all without one messenger of the Gospel, though some are working a little on their borders. When shall these regions have the Gospel? In our dispensary, one day, an Ili man came in. He spoke Mandarin, as all in the north and west do, and asked for some of our books; his friends, said he, had never heard of this doctrine, and he would like to take it back to them. Pray for him. It takes three months' travelling to reach his home from Tai-yuan Fu, or Pekin, and more from the coast. Another from the western borders had been riding for five months from Kashgar; this may give an idea of these vast regions still untouched.

Mr. Broomhall said that, at Mr. Moody's Convention at Northfield, it was resolved to address a circular letter to Christians generally, on the evangelisation of the world. In this letter it was stated that 800,000,000 of the human race were yet without the Gospel. The letter further said, "And yet there is an abundance of men and women in the Church to give the Gospel to every living creature before this century closes." If that was to be done there was no time to lose. On the wall at the end of the room there were these words, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." Concerning those 800,000,000 these words were true; and, even if no command to preach the Gospel had been given, nothing could be more clear than that it was the will of God that every man and woman on the face of the earth should know of his love in the gift of his Son.

He greatly wished that he and all who urged the claims of work abroad should avoid the use of a single word which even appeared to disparage work at home. The work was really one, and they could not neglect one part without injury to the other. He did not think that there were too many workers at home, and work at home had a most intimate connection with work abroad. From Manchester, Liverpool, Glasgow, London, and from this country generally, there were continually going out those whose ungodly lives were a most powerful hindrance to the work of the missionary in every land. For the sake of missionary work abroad, let them do their utmost to save men in their own country. But he was convinced that in no way could they so greatly help their home work as by sending out missionaries to the foreign field. This would call out fresh workers, and give them all fresh life and power; and, if these millions yet unevangelised were to be reached in this century, parents must be willing, as Mr. Hurditch had said, to give their children to the work. Mr. Broomhall referred to two of his own children who had gone to China—his eldest son and eldest daughter—and he assured parents present that they could not give up their loved ones to this work without receiving blessing themselves.

He was desired to say something about the China Inland Mission, and if he limited his remarks to this one mission, it was not from lack of warm sympathy with the work of other missions in China. He would not say a word which appeared to savour of boasting, but the China Inland Mission furnished an example of God's willingness to bless earnest and faithful effort put forth for the salvation of men. He then briefly told of Mr. Hudson Taylor going out in 1853, and returning to England in 1860, of his special purpose to get missionaries into the interior provinces then without any Protestant missionaries, and of his return to China in 1865.

When the China Inland Mission was formed, the distinguishing features of the work were:—(1) That suitable helpers in the work would be welcome whatever might be the section of the Church with which they were connected. (2) That there was no guarantee of income, and (3) no personal solicitation of funds. These were the lines upon which the work was still conducted. The effort had been blessed. There were now about 170 missionaries, including 34 wives of missionaries, many of whom were missionaries themselves before marriage. The money sent in from the commencement up to the present time amounted to £163,000.

The present year had been one of much blessing. When those going out this month had left, it would make forty who had gone this year. Last year forty-six went out. He wished that all the missionary societies were sending as many. The need was great, for in China there was yet a number greater than the population of Manchester to every missionary there.

His sister-in-law, Mrs. Hudson Taylor, came down with him to that Conference, but had been called away by a telegram telling of the dangerous illness of her father. He had received a note which she had written while returning to London, which he would read:—

"Please tell the Conference for me my solemn conviction that to carry the message of salvation to those who have never had the chance of hearing it, is the most crying need of the day, is the happiest work on earth, is the greatest honour that God can give to a man or woman. Tell them that in China the doors are open; that when I went inland to Tai-yuan in 1878, I found on my first Sunday there a company of women so interested in our message that they stayed till dark without food, hearing and asking questions about the truth. Since then, woman's work has been carried on in Shan-si, and has been begun without let or hindrance in Shen-si, Kan-suh, Si-chuen, Kwei-chau, and Yun-nan. Ask them to think of over one thousand one hundred walled cities to-day left without a worker for Christ, and tell them that the Master wants 1100 men at once, for that 'much will be lost, should the harvest wait;' nay, that much is being lost; for that in every ten and a quarter days as many souls are passing beyond our reach into eternity as at present inhabit Canterbury, Crewe, Eastbourne, Gravesend, Kidderminster, Luton, Leamington, Peterborough, Torquay, and Tunbridge Wells. Ask them in the Master's presence: Christian brother, Christian sister, what can you do, what will you do to meet this awful need? How far are you prepared to have fellowship with the Lord Jesus in his sacrifice for the lost? The Lord make the needs of the world real to his people!"

A FRUITFUL MEETING.

BY MISS FANNIE TURNER.

"The last meeting but one," was remarked, as we took our places on Wednesday afternoon. "Yes; near the end of the Conference; but we believe only at the beginning of the blessing that God is giving and going to give on it," was the answer.

And God honoured his children's faith! Few present will ever forget the solemnity of that December afternoon in the Clegg Memorial Hall of the Strangeways Refuge. The distant sound of the carpentering and wood-chopping of once homeless, but now well-cared-for, boys of the Refuge, and the busy hum of Manchester streets, but served to make the quiet of that large upper room the more marked. Our hearts had been deeply stirred, as in burning words one speaker after another urged the pressing claims of the heathen in all parts of the world—"Our Father's world, the world that He so loved" (see John iii. 16), as one speaker put it. Our thoughts had been turned to the inhabitants of Europe, Africa, and South America, and now Asia's needs were before us. God was speaking to many hearts, first opening out the claims of his great harvest field, and his Spirit inclined many to cry, "Lord, send out many more labourers into this vast field."

It was glorious to hear Rev. Robert Stewart, of Foo Chow, tell how he had just been to Dublin University with another missionary and two Cambridge Undergraduates, at the urgent request of the Dublin "men" themselves. How they had had two days of earnest well-attended meetings for consecration and prayer, and how on the third day God's call for workers in the foreign mission field was brought forward. And at the close it was suggested that any who had dedicated themselves, body, soul, and spirit, to God, and would like publicly to offer themselves for his work abroad, should come to the platform. "We expected," continued Mr. Stewart, "to see some, perhaps three or four, come forward. But I cannot describe my feelings, as first one, then another, rose and came up. We left the platform to give place to the young men who one by one advanced. Then the College authorities who were present gave up their places. Still another and another came forward, and the faces of some told that it was not without effort that they made this confession of a life's purpose before their fellow-men, and also told God they were willing for his sake to leave home and friends. Forty-two young fellows, in the hey-day of health and strength, stood before that audience, pledged to missionary work, should God so will it."

God came nearer still to many hearts and said, "You see I am sending forth labourers, and my work is blessed work." And his children answered, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Mr. Broomhall told how God had asked him if he were willing to give Him his eldest son and daughter for work in China, and how, "though" (the father's heart added) "it was the costliest gift He could have asked, I gave it to Him, and He has richly blessed the sacrifice."

Miss Fenton told how God had specially laid the needs of China on her heart, and that she had offered herself to Him for work there. That gradually, though not at first, the way was opened for her to go, and that she hoped to start next week, in connection with the work of the China Inland Mission.

The Spirit of God was indeed in our midst, asking, Who will go for us? And waiting hearts answered silently, "Here am I; send me."

God's work in Madagascar and the South Sea Islands was the next thing on the programme, but He put it into the hearts of two gentlemen in different parts of the hall to suggest to one of the Conference secretaries that then and there an opportunity should be given for any present to offer themselves for foreign mission work. The suggestion was announced. All was perfectly quiet. "God is here," we were told. "We wish for no excitement, no pressure; but, if any wish to come forward, we give this opportunity."

It is interesting to know that the first to rise was the grandson of the late Canon Stowell (whose name is so familiar in Manchester and elsewhere). Then two youths went up, followed by a young lady, who was quickly followed by another. Earnest prayer was offered that "God Himself would guide and direct aright all present." Two more youths came forward, also two other ladies, and quietly took their seats on the platform. The words, "Let us pray for these dear young people who have offered themselves for God's work," seemed scarcely needed, for surely most present were commending to our Heavenly Father those, his children. Many in the room knew that two of the ladies were earnest "home workers," whose service God was blessing, and that the young men were seeking to serve Him in daily life and business, and that they understood the step they were taking. And their friends could praise God for the way He had gradually been preparing and leading them up to it. And most loving and earnest, indeed, were the petitions offered up for them.

Then Mr. Phillipp (Canon Stowell's grandson) told, in simple words, that he was a Cambridge undergraduate, and had thought of "entering the Church." That about a year ago he had attended one of Mr. Stanley Smith's meetings, and was very much struck with his question, "Christ says, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel,' so it is not a question of 'Why should you go?' but 'Why should you not go?'" That over and over again he had pondered it, and now he gladly resolved to go abroad, just where God should send him.

Mr. Russell Hurditch said he felt sure many parents present must be sharing his feeling, that, though unable to go to the mission field themselves, as parents, they longed that God should honour their children by calling them to this glorious work. And he invited any parents present who would like to offer their precious children to God, should He so will it, for foreign service, to stand up. The response to this appeal showed that Mr. Hurditch had touched a sympathetic chord, and the act was immediately followed by simple trusting words of prayer, that God would bless the parents' desire, in his own way, and according to his own will.

Almost the opening prayer of the Conference had been, "Heavenly Father, bless our gathering, take every detail into thine own hands. Let the blessings on it be wide, world-wide spread; and oh, by thy Spirit's power, let it have practical results." As we left the Refuge that Wednesday evening, where over 100 homeless boys were sleeping in comfort, and thought over the events of that day, we could, indeed, thank God for answered prayer, and say, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad;" and once more commit into his hands those young lives publicly dedicated to his service—also others whom we knew who were seeking to know his will concerning them in the matter of missionary labour. We earnestly ask for prayer that God will open up the way for each of them, and very plainly show them, and those interested in them, "the next step."

After the evening meeting another lady offered herself for foreign work.

CLOSING MEETING.

The Conference met again in the evening, when the chair was taken by Mr. L. K. Shaw. The proceedings were opened with the singing of a hymn, and prayer having been offered by Mr. J. Garnett, the question, was discussed. On this subject, Rev. James Gall read a lengthy paper, in which he contrasted the rapid advance of the Christian faith in Apostolic days with its slow progress now. He urged a systematic method of evangelisation, and a more earnest seeking, on the part of workers, of the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

"HOW THE CHURCH IS TO REACH THE HOME HEATHEN,"

Dr. Ziemann followed, and said: I asked this afternoon, Is not God tired of our consecration? I ask you now, Are you not tired of your own consecration? of saying, "I give; I consecrate myself; take my life, take my life?" Is God unfaithful? Does God deceive us? Does He say some things that He does not mean?

Last year I was preaching in Vienna; after the meeting, a sceptical doctor visited me, and said, "I want a little talk with you on the Christian life you have been preaching about. What does it mean?" I told him, and he said, "Sir, it is supernatural." He looked solemn; but, ah! friends, he made me feel solemn; and when he left me alone, I am not ashamed to tell you that I went on my knees to ask God to teach me what I ought to have known from the day that I was converted, sixteen or seventeen years ago—that Christian life is supernatural life. That life is not made up of mere talking, preaching, singing, thinking, or visiting the poor. The Lord Jesus Christ did not die to make talking machines. No; He gave us life. He said, "Lo, I am your Life," and Christ is your Life. The next day I had to preach again in Vienna, and I never felt so unfit for the duty. As the hour approached nearer and nearer, I felt that I could not go and preach until I had gone on my knees and cried, "O my Father in heaven! If I have never given myself to Thee till now, now do I come, just as I am. I want Christ as my Life and Light. I want Christ! Christ! Christ!" Is God unfaithful? Does God play with us? Does He send us into the world to be actors, and to play with religion? O God, make us real! It does not matter if a man has not a single notion about the Holy Ghost, as long as God gives him something better than the notion—the power of the Holy Ghost; for then he can say with truth, "I know what it is to have the living Christ." God make us real, and we shall know the power and mystery of the Holy Ghost.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Jun.: By "reaching the home heathen" I understand going forth to unbelieving men and women, whose eyes are darkened, whose understandings are dead, and proclaiming to them the Divine facts that Christ has put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, that He has died for the ungodly, that He has been buried, that He has been raised again from the dead, that He has been seen after his resurrection by above five hundred brethren at once, that He has been raised to God's right hand, that He is now preaching through his servants unto men the forgiveness of sins, and that by Him all who believe are justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. When we start for the heathen abroad we have to take ship and go to distant lands—Europe, Asia, Africa, America, Madagascar, the islands of the sea; when we seek the heathen at home we have to go down into the slums and alleys, into the streets, the houses, the chapels, and the churches. For this latter purpose we look around and find that there are numberless organisations, associations, societies, agencies. The quantity of them is enormous, and yet are the home heathen reached? Not, I think, as they ought to be.

The question presents itself to our minds, With all this quantity of organisation, how is it that this is the case? In other words, do not you think that we are too liable to take into consideration the quantity of work done rather than the quality? I read an advertisement in the paper this morning, which, speaking of certain machines, said, "Any quantity may be ordered; quality guaranteed;" and I thought to myself, Would to God that that were true of all those who try to work for the Master. We want the quantity, but we also require that the quality shall be good. No man can work for God until he loves God. I suppose the baptism of the Holy Ghost means a great deal more love for God; I suppose it means that we get such a burning love for Him that we can then go forth rightly qualified for the work of saving souls. Before the Lord told Peter to feed his sheep, He three times asked the question, "Lovest thou me?" "Lord, thou knowest that I love Thee." It may be a weak love, but yet it is a genuine love. Then comes the command, since that quality is there, "Go forth and feed my sheep." It is not enough that we should have a quantity of machinery, but we must have the quality guaranteed, and according to the quality that God requires. There is a great deal of playing at religious work in our days. I have often played at it myself—played at preaching, played at working for God. There is no power in that. I went the other day to pay a visit to a lady. When I walked into the drawing-room I noticed in front of the fire what I thought to be a dog. Its paws were stretched out in front of it, its eyes seemed to have a gleam of light in them, and its coat was curled and glossy. I went to pat it, but I instantly drew back my hand, because the dog was stuffed. Now, a great deal of our Christianity in the present day is just stuffed. Oh, that the Church of God, that you and I to-night, could lay hold upon this truth, that we want, in order to work for God and to reach the heathen at home, not so much to be able to write "D.D.," and so on, after one's name, as the quality of being empty enough to be able to draw on his fulness, and weak enough to lean on his strength—the quality of being able to look up in child-like love to Him and say, "Father, speak to me through thy Spirit." Had we but this, then work which has often been fruitless will become fruitful; where we have had discouragements, encouragements will arise, and where we have had no blessings at all, we shall receive a joyful and surprising blessing.

I believe most sincerely that if we are to reach the heathen abroad, or anywhere else, we must first see to it that we are right at home. If you are cold in the extremities the doctor will very likely tell you that there is some weakness about the heart; and if the extremities of the earth are to be reached we must see to it that England, which, thank God, may be considered the heart of the world, is beating with true love to Christ, who loved us, and who has now implanted in so many of us a burning love for Him, You may ask me, Ought we to send men to preach the Gospel abroad? and I would say, emphatically, "Yes;" but if we are to do so we must have more Gospel at home. Is it right that the nations should draw water from the wells of salvation sunk here? Emphatically, "Yes," but if it is to be so we must see that the wells are made deeper, else there is a danger of their running dry. Let us each look into these hearts of ours and say, "O God, grant to me to-night that I may know what it is to have a well of living water springing up within me; not a shallow reservoir filled only by showers, but an eternal well bubbling up with the waters of everlasting life. Grant that I may realise that others may come and drink from me, and that by God's grace I may be able to quench their thirst." It is important that the well at home should be deep if the heathen are to be satisfied from it. I think each of us can be doing something for God. He does not ask you to do my work, and He does not ask me to do your work; but God has given us each a work to do; let us rise up and do it.

Another hymn having been sung and prayer offered,

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch addressed the Conference, urging that if the heathen either at home or abroad were to be reached there must be downright Christianity. There is no borderland between downright infidelity and downright Christianity. We must take in the great mysteries of our most holy faith, and lay hold on them with the grip of our whole being, and be believers in the great facts that God has revealed concerning his Son and his saved ones, or else we must throw the Bible away as mere fiction and live as we list, like the fool who says, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

"So near, so very near to God,
Nearer we cannot be,
For in the person of his Son,
We are as near as He."

Have we said, "That is true: I am brought to Thee by the death of thy Son, by the great price at which Thou hast redeemed me"? And are not we loved on this night with the same burning love with which God loved us when he gave his Son for us? Is not his love as constant, as deep, as full as ever it was when He had to choose between deliverance and the awful curse of Golgotha, the hiding of the face which was worse than hell to Him, the awful smiting for our transgressions; the desertion, that we might be welcomed; the stripping, that we might be clothed; the hell, that we might have heaven; the cross, that we might have the crown; the awful curse of Calvary, that we might have all the wealth and blessing of eternal glory? If this be the case, what should be the outcome of a world lying in the arms of the wicked one? Should it not be that we should go forth to its rescue with the love of God welling up in our hearts? That is what we want—not that men should be forced, but that they should be constrained by the mighty power of God's love to go to the drawing-room, to the parlour, to the back slum, to the poor harlot of the city, and with hearts filled with the love of Christ dispense it freely to others? We want to have, as our friend Duncan Matheson said, eternity upon our eyeballs, to take as our motto, "God and Eternity," or, to be like my dear friend Mr. Hull, who died in London twenty years ago, whose motto was, "Watch for souls."

We live in a day when two forces are being rapidly headed up, the forces of evil and the forces of good. The followers of the devil are marching with swifter course than ever; the forces of evil are combining, strengthening, deepening. Infidelity has cursed our country to an enormous extent, and that is the real secret why the churches are empty. There is doubt in the pulpit, and a doubting pulpit will make a sceptical congregation; and when men do not hear of the message of peace and salvation which gives hope for the future and a solid rock for the feet at present, they will care nothing for the church unless it be turned into a concert-room. They will then be thankful for the nice music, perhaps, and for the engaging entertainments; but there will be no real Gospel preached to them: what will be given to them will be a Christless, pithless, marrowless Gospel, a Godless Gospel.

Oh, that God would give us such a revival of holy zeal as to lead us to confess that we have wrongly served Him and ill-requited his love. The theology of to-day has lost all power of bringing deliverance to the heathen around us. There is the doctrine of man's regeneration, or rather man's utter ruin necessitating regeneration, but it has been kept out of the pulpits. The great doctrine of atonement by blood has been shut out by some as fit only for the shambles, whilst, alas! the cross has been hidden in many cases by the trappings of ceremonialism. Then there has been wiping out of future wrath for the impenitent. Well do I remember a young man, who went to hear a celebrated preacher, who had changed his views and who said that in future he would use the word hell only as a figure of speech. That young man, as the result, threw the reins upon the neck of his lusts, and to-day he is wallowing in sin.

But I rejoice that God has been so manifestly in the midst of his people here for the last two days, and that there have been some hearts deeply touched and brought to his feet in sincere dedication to Him. And just think of the possibilities for good that may result from this Conference, if two or three hundred Christians leave it filled with the Holy Ghost and longing to proclaim to all men the blessed truths of the Bible. Our redeemed lives will then be lives of fortune-making, the outcome of which should put to shame the greatest fortunes that were ever amassed in Manchester or New York; we should gain something worth the having, something which we should not have to leave this side of Jordan; for our reward shall be the glorious invitation of Christ, "Come, ye blessed of my Father," for "he that winneth souls is wise, and they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever." Go back to your churches and chapels and mission-rooms and homes, but I charge you not to miss the chance that you now have to wrest the heathen from heathendom and win them to God.

Mr. G. R. Kirlew reminded the Conference that the home heathen were not only to be found in the slums, but in the large houses of the wealthy, among the poor-rich, who lived up avenues and drives. No one, he said, thought of giving them a tract, or paying them a missionary visit, but Christian ladies and gentlemen would find glorious opportunities of doing work for God, if, when they met their wealthy friends in the drawing-room or elsewhere, they would speak to them a few words of the saving grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Major Tucker said that he gloried in belonging to the very poorest mission on the whole face of the earth. If he had to depend upon this country for support he should be starved. But he did not complain, because the true outfit of a missionary could not be provided by silver or gold, inasmuch as it consisted simply of the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The way to get this baptism was the complete sacrifice of self, and that once achieved the power of God would descend and enable the baptized one to conquer all hearts. When the heathen saw missionaries so baptized come to them, they discerned the power of God in them, and said, "Yes, here is God, give us this religion." Major Tucker then invited all to kneel and resolve that night to enthrone the dethroned Holy Ghost in their hearts; and, after praying with much fervour for the descent of the power of God upon them, he asked those who felt that the Lord had answered them according to their desire to stand up. A number of those so appealed to responded by rising to their feet. Major Tucker poured out thanksgiving to God.

A hymn was then sung, after which,

Mr. Shaw explained how it was that a Conference on Foreign Missions should have been called by those so intimately connected with home work. He said that for four years they had gathered together with hearts taken up with the needs of the home-heathen, especially of the young, upon whom the future hope or danger of the country rested; but it was because they had hitherto been so wrapped up with these home matters that they had now sought to throw wide open the arms of their sympathies and to extend their prayers and their efforts to the ends of the earth.

Mr. MacGill having offered prayer, this most inspiring Conference was brought to a close with the singing of the Doxology.

Dear Sir,—When many hearts are being moved to offer themselves for the Lord's service in the work of foreign missions, surely it is a time for his stewards, to whom He has entrusted the silver and the gold, who are themselves kept back from service abroad, to have the privilege of sending forth those who are unable to go "at their own charges."

We make no personal application for funds; but we do lay the want before the Lord, and upon the hearts of his people, from a practical knowledge of the present need.—I am yours,

Leonard N. Shaw.

CANON WILBERFORCE, who is ordered by his medical advisers complete and prolonged rest, has arrived at Penzance for the benefit of his health.

OXFORD "HELPS" TO THE BIBLE.

DEAR SIR,—I have noticed with very great surprise the gratuitous and unjustifiable attack of Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode upon the well-known "Helps to the Study of the Bible." Your original correspondent, in calling attention to the expiatory sacrifice of the scapegoat, raised, very usefully, a most important question, upon which we should be pleased to communicate with him further. But the motive of Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode in snatching at such an opportunity merely to rush in and revive an old grievance which was effectually silenced in The Record of June 4, 1879, six years ago, is open to a very adverse criticism. When they called your attention to Canon Tristram's letter of March 19 in that year, it would have relieved them from any charge of misleading you had they laid before you also the answer of his brother Canon, the editor of the Oxford "Helps," which followed in the same newspaper, and which I now enclose.

Under the circumstances, your readers will fail to see any good object in Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode's onslaught upon a work which has in their eyes the unpardonable demerit that students appear to prefer it to the similar book published by them. No question was raised by your correspondent as to the scapegoat which can be solved by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode's dragging the merits of their own publication into discussion. No question was raised which justified their involved allusions to a mythical "Oxford Printer." Nevertheless, I seize the opportunity to assure them that their view as to the honorary degree of M.A. conferred upon Mr. Pickard Hall is in every point erroneous. He did NOT compile the "Helps to the Study of the Bible."

I have trespassed upon your space further than this baseless onslaught of the Queen's printer's justified. In conclusion, may I correct a misconception to which your own note may give currency? Let me state once more that the "Helps" emphatically meets your own just demand, that "the Bible student should have the aids to which he commits himself written by scholars eminent in their various departments." It was compiled by a Biblical student and traveller of repute in the Holy Land. It has been carefully overlooked by the Bishop of Chester, the Archdeacon of Oxford, Dr. Angus, and the Rev. Henry Deane, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, whilst the scientific information was revised by Professors Rolleston, Westwood, and Lawson, scholars of the highest authority in their several departments. One testimony to the work remains beyond the reach of these invidious attacks, and in a land in which the Bible is so closely studied it is, perhaps, the strongest. After nine years of issue, the demand for the book increases more and more. Upwards of 837,000 have been sold, and though our readers constantly communicate to us very valuable suggestions, they never fail to bear most encouraging testimony to the assistance they have received from this book.

Under these circumstances do not your readers decide that Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode owe us a very straightforward apology?—Yours faithfully, Henry Frowde.

The following is copied from The Record of June 4, 1879:—

"To the Editor of 'The Record.'

"Sir,—My attention has only to-day been called to a letter of your correspondent, 'H. B. T.' in which he notices a similarity between the 'Notes in a Teacher's Bible,' published by the Queen's Printers, and the 'Helps to the Study of the Bible,' published by the Clarendon Press. Being the sole compiler of the latter (except the indices and concordance) I can assure you that the only copy of the 'Teacher's Bible' I ever saw before publishing the 'Helps' was one whose main portion was the reprint of a summary of the Bible taken from an old folio. I never read a page of it nor got a single idea from it. The summary of the various books of the Bible given in the 'Helps' was drawn entirely by myself from the Bible, in which I was only aided by certain standard commentaries.

"The topographical, ethnological, and historical summaries, and the chapter on Jewish sects, were drawn entirely from my own notes of lectures delivered after a visit of some months to Palestine. The tables of parables, miracles, &c., I have known by heart ever since I was a schoolboy, and the original of the 'Harmony of the Gospels' has been in daily use by me for a period of twenty-five years, and the column of the 'localities' was supplied from my own knowledge.

"After this book of mine had been published for a year and a half, a copy of a new edition of the Queen's Printer's 'Teacher's Bible' was shown to me for the first time, and it seemed to me to closely resemble my 'Helps,' which I was then asked to revise and enlarge for a new edition. The only changes I made in my first edition were those due to friendly criticisms, and of no importance, but I added to it sixty pages of new matter. The tables of fauna, flora, musical instruments, geology, &c., &c., were an original idea of my own, suggested by no one. The Hebrew names were drawn by myself from the original text, and in every instance collated by me with the corresponding word in the Greek LXX. For their identification with modern names I consulted every work on the subject to which I had access, and I am chiefly indebted for my information to papers I heard read before the Society of Biblical Archæology, to the Quarterly Statements of the Palestine Exploration Fund, to the 'Biblical Educator,' and the works of Buckhardt, Van Lennep, Tristram, and Wood, and the Lexicon of Gesenius.

"The proofs of the tables of animals, birds, insects and plants, were carefully revised by Professors Rolleston, Westwood, and Lawson, in their respective departments, and I am obliged to 'H. B. T.' for giving me this opportunity of recording my thanks to them for their valuable assistance.

"I have not, up to this moment, seen the new edition of Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode's 'Teacher's Bible,' and I have not the slightest idea how far it bears any resemblance to the last edition of my work, which was printed a year ago. I have still in my possession the MS. of the whole of the 'Helps,' in my own handwriting, every word of which was written without my ever seeing 'The Perfect Compilation,' which your correspondent charges me with 'pillaging.'

"Although the Clarendon Press preferred that the compiler's name should not be published, it is due to the public to know that he is not a mere 'hack' of the press, but an M.A. of Oxford, and a theological lecturer, who, for a quarter of a century, has been both a student and a teacher of the Bible, and has visited almost every Biblical site in the Mediterranean, Egypt, and Palestine; he is an F.S.A., a member of the Society of Biblical Archæology as well as of several other learned associations, and is also privileged to prefix to his name the same ecclesiastical title by which, if we mistake not, 'H. B. T.' is distinguished; but in this instance he defers to the wishes of the delegates of the Clarendon Press, and, preserving his incognito, begs to subscribe himself,

"Your humble servant,
"The Compiler of 'Helps to the Study of the Bible.'

WORKING MEN IN BATTERSEA.

WE have noticed lately in our columns the very vigorous work carried on in Battersea by Mr. D. M. Cameron and those associated with him. On Saturday last the friends assembled in large numbers on the new freehold site they have obtained close to the Wandsworth-road, Railway Station, on the occasion of the laying of the foundation stone of "Union Tabernacle," a plain, substantial building, which will, when finished, be the centre of future operations. Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's Churchyard, in laying the stone, heartily congratulated Mr. Cameron and his people. The Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Mr. J. Fletcher Moulton, Q.C., M.P. (the newly-elected member for the district), Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Rev. Dr. Megarry, Rev. E. Henderson, and many others took part in this interesting working-man's movement to reach their fellow working-men with the Gospel, and it is hoped they may be able, with the help of friends, to open their new tabernacle free of debt. Dr. Dunbar, 2, The Cedars, Clapham Common, S.W., is the treasurer.

EDINBURGH.—An esteemed correspondent here wrote last week:—"The spiritual movement goes on most encouragingly amongst the students. The meetings are not always so large, but the after-meetings give good fruits. Next Sunday will doubtless see a crowded meeting, when Prof. Drummond comes from Glasgow to address it. We send a deputation to his Glasgow platform; others go to Kilmarnock, Newcastle, and other places."

Letters to the Editor.

PANTOMIME CHILDREN.

Dear Sir,—The question, "What do you intend to do this winter to prevent the ruin of the pantomime children?" was put to me by a police officer, in a north-country town, where the police have worked well in the protection of girls, both before and since the passing of the new Act. It seems to me that in every town where there is to be a pantomime this winter, the workers in the cause of purity ought to combine promptly in some scheme for protecting these children. The local Vigilance Association propose to write to the manager of the theatre to draw his attention to the subject of the frequent ruin of pantomime children; we intend also to invite the little pantomime girls to tea on the opening day, when a few simple words of warning and advice will be spoken.

Yours faithfully, An Englishwoman.

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.

Dear Sir,—As many Christian parents will doubtless be inviting young friends to their houses during the Christmas holidays, will you permit me to say that the Children's Special Service Mission, while always glad to arrange for drawing-room services for young people, are now enabled to make a further proposal for the coming Christmas. Where a drawing-room is offered for the purpose, not more than twenty-five miles from London, one of the members of our committee will be prepared to give a magic-lantern lecture on the "Pilgrim's Progress," on condition that from fifty to one hundred children are invited.

This lecture is intended to be in the nature of a direct evangelistic effort, and an attempt to reach the hearts of young people by "eye-gate" as well as by "ear-gate," and real blessing should, therefore, be sought and expected.

Will friends wishing to arrange for one of these lectures kindly write to me at once? as we expect to have many applications. No expense will be incurred, except for carriage of lantern and railway fare, which we request may be defrayed.—Yours faithfully, T. B. Bishop.

REBECCA JARRETT.

Dear Sir,—I am collecting a modest little fund for Rebecca Jarrett, who, as it is well known, has no resources of her own. She will be deeply grateful, I know, when released from prison, to find there is something, however small, in the way of material resources to start life with again. Rebecca does not want much; but she has expressed the wish several times that the blessed rescue work, to which God called her while here, might be renewed when she is free to take it up again, and that some way might open for it to be renewed on self-supporting principles.

She had an idea of opening a little laundry, here or somewhere in a country town, and of making this a means towards carrying out the work of rescue, by gathering in poor, fallen girls to work under her, not only on the old lines of "Homes," but on the more flexible lines which we practised here, and which we had reason to believe gave opportunity for much blessing. She is a good laundress, and an economical housekeeper. I mention her (our) plan, to give friends more confidence if they are disposed to help us a little. A few gifts have already come to our hands unasked. A "Pitman" of the North sends me ten shillings out of his wages for poor Rebecca, whom he never saw. God bless him! He did not give me his name. A "poor servant" in Kensington, who has no money, has worked a beautiful piece of patchwork, which I have sold; she asks me to give the worth of it to Rebecca, of whom she has heard and read.

When so many claims are rising up as at this time, I am most unwilling to beg, and have refrained from asking help for our hospital for poor women in Winchester, which is a centre for wider work. But as the "Rebecca Fund" is a very modest one, I am emboldened to ask a trifle from any who may read this, and be moved on our poor friend's behalf.—Yours faithfully,

Josephine Butler.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Dec. 20, Exod. xxxiv. 21—35; Dec. 21, xxxv. 21—35; Dec. 22, xl. 17—27; Dec. 23, xl. 28—38; Dec. 24, Psalm lxxxv. 1—13; Dec. 25, Matt. i. 18—25; Dec. 26, Psalm lxvi. 1—17.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

San Francisco is said to have 4000 drinking saloons.

One-ninth of the whole army in the United Kingdom are believed to be total abstainers.

In the South African Parliament the wine interest threatens to be supreme.

Mr. Coad has been conducting an undenominational Temperance mission at Levenshulme.

Mr. J. C. Stevenson, who has had charge of the English Sunday Closing Bill, is a member of the new Parliament.

In The Nineteenth Century there is an article, which The Alliance News calls pernicious, on "Stimulants and Narcotics."

The Temperance Society of the Blue Cross at Geneva was commenced in 1877, with twenty-seven members. It now numbers 4200.

About 5000 persons were present at a late Temperance demonstration in New Zealand. It was the largest ever held in the colony.

The Coffee House News urges Temperance people to regularly patronise the coffee-houses. It urges this, as the best way to secure their improvement.

A correspondent complains that in London, at some restaurants, sixpence per cup is charged for "coffee," composed of "extract and hot water."

The Rock regrets that Temperance meetings are, as a rule, almost entirely composed of Temperance men, and urges abstainers to try to bring non-abstainers.

Mr. Valentine, Sir Wilfrid Lawson's successful opponent at Cockermouth, is a pronounced Temperance man, and in favour of vigorous Temperance legislation.

The present Mayor of Grimsby, on his election, boldly declared the liquor traffic the curse of the country, and that he would do his utmost for its suppression.

The Church of England Temperance Society has a standing recommendation to non-abstainers to be abstainers during holiday times, if only for the sake of example.

The Central Temperance Association, London, has appealed for a million pennies for the removal of debt, and for aggressive work. Over 100,000 have been received.

Rev. J. M. Hewson, Travelling Temperance Secretary to the Baptist Total Abstinence Association, recently conducted services, &c., at various centres in Yorkshire.

The Election has cost the Temperance party not a few of its best men. It is held, however, that numerically, and even as regards leaders, the gains are greater than the losses.

At Carubbers Close, Edinburgh, a Temperance meeting is held every Saturday night; 1000 to 1500 of the lowest residents in the old town and near attend, and many souls have been saved.

Both Mr. Burt and Mr. Saunders are named as Sir Wilfrid Lawson's successor as Parliamentary Temperance leader. We believe both sides would welcome Sir Wilfrid's appearance at the House.

The Wesleyan Temperance Demonstration, Dec. 8, Free Trade Hall, Manchester, was a great success. Rev. Chas. Garrett, chairman, received an ovation. The speakers were Revs. Dr. Stephenson, S. K. Hocking, and J. Colwell, and Mr. J. Barnsley, Birmingham.

THE EARL OF ABERDEEN has heartily accepted the presidency of the Golden-lane and Hoxton Costers' Mission, in place of the late Earl of Shaftesbury.

SHELTER FOR HOMELESS MEN.—Dear Sir,—A few weeks ago you kindly inserted a note from me on this subject, and I thank the friends who responded to my appeal. I regret, however, that I am unable at present to go on with the effort. This is partly owing to insufficient support, but more to the state of my health. I thankfully acknowledge the following sums from friends with whom I have no other means of communicating. Unless they write to the contrary, I shall devote their offerings to kindred work in connection with the "Strangers' Rest." Should any of your readers be led to take up this much-needed work, I should be glad to give them any information in my power.—Yours faithfully,

John Jackson.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. W. BAILEY (of the Open-air Mission) has concluded seven days' Gospel services at the Gospel-hall, Peckham. Several have confessed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, while backsliders have been restored, and Christians have received great blessing.

MARLBOROUGH.—The Y.M.C.A. of this town have been conducting an evangelistic mission in the Town Hall, through the services of the Evangelisation Society, who sent down two very able evangelists, Mr. William Taylor and Mr. John Elliott. The mission has continued five weeks, though an eight days' mission only was arranged for in the first place

SOUTHSEA.—Mr. W. Spencer Walton has lately been conducting mission services in the parish of St. Simon's, Southsea. Many found his Bible-readings for the promotion of Scriptural holiness most helpful. It is also believed that several received lasting blessing to their souls through the evangelistic and children's services. We thank God for the visit of his servant, to be repeated, we hope, for two or three days, early in January.

PLYMOUTH.—Mission services conducted by Mr. and Mrs. King, at the Notte-street Hall, Plymouth, have attracted large audiences during the past fortnight. The realistic manner in which Mr. King presents Scripture incidents rivets the attention of the most careless, and Mrs. King sings and speaks with a gentle power that reaches the hearts of all her hearers. By invitation they will continue the services at Plymouth for some time longer, and then spend a fortnight at Devonport.

MR GEORGE NEEDHAM held a week's services with Father O'Connor's Reformed Catholic congregation in new York City. Mr. Sankey sang at the opening service in Masonic Temple, and Mr. E. C. Avis, who is now regularly associated with Mr. Needham, directed the singing the other days of the week. So great an interest was created, that Mr. Needham will return to New York to continue the services the latter part of December. This is the first effort the evangelists have made to reach the Roman Catholics specifically, and it is gratifying to learn that the work has been a success from the start.

NORMANDY.—Dear Sir,—I have spent most of the summer and autumn in Lisieux, Normandy, and think that a good work is begun. In a small town where there is a large Roman Catholic element, and the power of the priests is so strong, there is necessarily much to contend with. During the last few months printed invitations to "les réunion populaires" have been distributed, and are bringing in many of the peasantry who, for the most part, are quite ignorant of the Gospel. For three days M. Meyer, with the aid of Pasteur M. Audibert, held special meetings, which were attended beyond our expectation. We pray that a blessing may attend the work this winter.

Alice L. Oakeshott.

23, Avenue du Bois de Boulogne, Paris.

GREAT MALVERN—An interesting and happy ten days' mission has been concluded here, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., the preacher being Mr. Henry Thorne. The Lord granted an abundant blessing on the Word preached so earnestly. With frequent reference to interesting cases in his own experience, of individuals brought to Christ, and by abundant illustration, the hearers were brought face to face with the truth. Throughout the mission many souls were blessed. The meetings were also a time of spiritual refreshment to those of the Lord's people of all denominations who took part in them; many came from the various Malverns, clustering round the hills, and from other parts to hear the joyful tidings.

MANCHESTER.—A fortnight's mission was held at St. Mark's, Holland-street, last month. The rector, Rev. Wm. Muzzell, for the previous six weeks held meetings for special prayer. Mr. Lakin preached, and Rev. Alex. Atkinson, of London, sang. Mrs. and Miss Wilson, and Mrs. and Miss Watson, of Carlisle, held mothers' meetings daily at 3.30. The mission band was ably supplemented by several members of the City Mission, through the kindness of Mr. Wakefield MacGill. The results surpassed all expectation; there was a general breaking down among the people, the news spread beyond the parish, girls brought their companions from the mill and the loom, mothers, their sons, wives, their husbands, and daughters, their mothers. Nearly 300 professed to have found Christ, many had their spiritual life deepened, their zeal intensified, and the happy faces and streaming eyes of the hundreds who testified at our meetings told its own tale.

MR. GEORGE SOLTAU held meetings in Hastings for four days, from December 7 to December 10. Each afternoon he gave a Bible-reading in the Y.W.C.A. rooms, Mildmay House, and on Monday and Wednesday evenings a Gospel address to women only. These meetings were well attended, the afternoon meetings being specially crowded. Much of the power of the Holy Spirit was realised in all the services, and souls were saved, and the Lord's people much refreshed. On Thursday evening the President and Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association invited about 200 young men to tea to meet Mr. Soltau, and to hear an address from him on "Jesus only, the Power for Social Purity." This meeting was held for the purpose of inaugurating a Branch of the White Cross Purity Society for Hastings.

PURITY WORK FOR INDIA.—A gentleman engaged in mission work in India, has for some years circulated tracts on purity extensively there. He considers the present awakening a specially favourable time for extending this work, but needs assistance. It is to be hoped that the deep interest aroused in England may cause many to look towards the millions in Asia who are doubly bound. Special efforts should be made to instruct our fellow-men in the East. Correspondence is invited by this worker, whose address will be furnished by the Editor of this paper.

POOR IN STRATFORD.—Dear Sir,—The need of help among the extreme poor, many of whom are aged, infirm, and some with large families and out of work, has induced the Committee of the Maryland Point Mission, Stratford, to relieve them during the winter months. Dinners and soup are supplied weekly, and coals as well. In sickness they are attended to. We have already begun this good and greatly needed work. To sustain this effort the help of Christian friends is earnestly requested.—Yours faithfully,

John Stabb, Treasurer.

6, Norcott-road, Stoke Newington, N.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.—We have received the following from the Young Women's Christian Association, 3, Great Charles-street, Birmingham:—Our proximity to the Central Railway Stations makes us willing to arrange for meeting any young woman who may be coming to Birmingham as a stranger, if desired, whether belonging to the Y.W.C.A. or not. It would be necessary to give notice at least a day beforehand, and to mention clearly the train and station. The guarantee on our part would be, a red recognition card, and a transfer paper signed by the hon. sec., Mrs. E. Watson, 103, Harborne-road, Birmingham, to whom all letters should be addressed.

TO BIBLE READERS.—The late Rev. Josiah Miller, M.A., left on his decease some copies of his work, "Christianum Organum; or, The Inductive Method in Scripture and Science." Dr. Stoughton, in a letter dated Nov. 24, 1885, says:—"It is based on a capital idea—the application of inductive study to the reading of the Bible, as well as to the examination of nature. The Bible is to the theologian what nature in all its comprehensiveness is to the philosopher. I take that to be the principle maintained in the book. There is much in it that is truly valuable, and may be read by young students with great advantage. I do not know of any other compressed treatise that treats the important subject as well as this does." A few copies remain at this office for sale, at 3s. 6d. Early application is desirable to prevent disappointment.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE IN INDIA.—A number of ladies and gentlemen assembled last week in the Lower Exeter Hall, Strand, in order to meet Mr. J. Gelson Gregson, secretary of the Soldiers' Total Abstinence Association of India. The chair was taken by Rev. Canon Leigh. Mr. Gregson in addressing the meeting urged the necessity of the foundation of some agency to look after the temperance soldiers when they returned to this country with their savings, amounting in some cases to £150 per man; for there were plenty of sharpers in this enlightened country who could swallow the soldiers and their savings wholesale without being troubled with moral indigestion. It had been said that is was impossible for a man to be a total abstainer in India on the score of health, but, according to their returns, twice the number of non-abstainers went into hospital during the year. Rather more than 11,000 men belonged to their association, all of whom had kept the pledge, and if he included the members of other societies who were not pledged members of the association, there were 15,000 total abstainers serving in the British army in India.

The Book World.

THE WONDROUS LOVE Series of wall-texts, forwarded by Mr. J. S. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay-park, are especially good. They are well printed on a blue ground, with handsome border. The "Watchword" and "Pearl Motto" series are also very good. "The Ruby Illustrated Almanack" and "Ruby Leaflets" are well known and much prized.

PEARLS OF WISDOM FROM THE PARABLES OF CHRIST. By A. L. O. E. 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. They are, indeed, "Pearls!" In her own inimitable style the authoress lays before us the parable, and briefly and most pointedly enunciates the teaching of our Lord; then in true Oriental language she illustrates the story with another—one of those Eastern fables for which she has become so famous. The illustrations of the parables are in a happy style of monochrome, while the general get-up is excellent.

SENT TO COVENTRY. By M. L. RIDLEY. 3s. 6d. Shaw & Co. This is an excellent sketch of schoolboy days, the characters, manners, and phraseology being true to the life. The entrance of a tradesman's son into a school for "gentlemen" was greeted with disdain and contempt, while every opportunity was seized to heap indignities upon him. But by his moral principles and noble bearing he conquered all but a few, who proved themselves highly unworthy of the title which they claimed for themselves. We have not read a better boys' book this season.

BURR'S LIBRARY INDEX. Sampson Low & Co. This is a most ingenious and valuable expedient for keeping within easy reference the variety of subjects, facts, and events which come to the notice of professional and public men. The plan upon which it is compiled is simple but effective. Words and names are indexed by the first two letters, with thumb holes cut in the edges of the leaves, in addition to the projecting "tabs" containing the capital letters. It is, we should think, the most complete and exhaustive system extant, and when adopted, is certain to save an immense amount of time and labour.

HISTORICAL RELIGION AND BIBLICAL REVELATION. By H. HARRIS, B.D. Second and revised edition. Henry Frowde. A closely reasoned defence of Inspiration, designed to meet the two well-worn objections that the historical basis of revealed religion is defective, and that if it were more perfect it would still be insufficient to claim belief. The writer shows conclusively that historical facts are the safest and most natural medium of a Divine communication, while God has added an internal witness of his truth which supplies all that external evidence may fail to give. He justly states that while confessions of faith must not be wantonly multiplied, it is dangerous to discard or alter primitive creeds.

RELIGIOUS PROGRESS. The Practical Christianity of Christ. 2s. 6d. Trübner & Co. This is a melancholy book. The writer formulates a scheme to which he believes men of all religions, Hindoo, Buddhist, Jewish, Mahommedan, and Christians may consistently give assent, thereby promoting religious unity and progress. This scheme he has, in spite of bodily infirmities, been elaborating since 1841. Christian duty, in his opinion, may be summed up in the maxim: "Strive to obtain the favour of God, and to merit the esteem of man." For the unity he desires, we have no centre, for the progress he advocates no motive power, as the Comforter and the Cross are equally ignored. The builder has laboured hard, the temple is very spacious, but God's foundation-stone, though nominally retained is virtually rejected.

PICTURES OF ST. PAUL. Drawn in an English home. By A. L. O. E. Gall & Inglis. In a style peculiar to herself the author interweaves the history of the great Apostle with incidents of English home life, thus elevating the latter and giving to the former a practical value not always discernible in more pretentious works. The illustrations are not only numerous, but well selected and well executed. Those who appreciate A. L. O. E.'s "Captives of Babylon" will find this volume very useful as a Sunday or week-day instructor. When we add that the object of the book is to promote zeal in the cause of missions and to aid those "Indian Sisters," to whose spiritual welfare A. L. O. E. has given up English comforts and joys, we hope that lovers of the heathen will promote its circulation.

STUDIES IN WORSHIP MUSIC (second series). By JOHN SPENCER CURWEN. 3s. Curwen & Sons. This is a volume of the most interesting facts and useful information. But it is even more than this: it is an authority on the much-discussed and oft-abused subject of congregational singing. Ably and interestingly Mr. Curwen treats both sides of the question. As a devoted musician, entering into the spirit, rather than the letter, of true music, he leaves no stone unturned in his desire for practical results, and we heartily agree with him in his remarks on the training of congregations in worship music, and on the management of choirs. While a few readers may not be in perfect sympathy with all Mr. Curwen says, his Catholicity and experience make his book the choir-master's veritable vade mecum.

THE BOYS' AND GIRLS' COMPANION volume for 1885 (1s. 6d. Church of England Sunday-school Institute) is one of the best of the kind we have seen. The stories are good, natural, and full of a noble spirit, just such as we should desire our boys and girls to be animated by. LESSONS ON THE CHILDREN OF THE BIBLE (by Rev. T. H. BARNETT. 1s. Same publishers) is admirable for the use of Sunday-school teachers. From the same office we have received also a series of New-Year's Addresses—to teachers, "How shall I work for Christ?" to parents, "The Child, the Father of the Man;" to elder boys, "A growing body, and how to keep it;" for elder girls, "A Word to the Wise;" to Sunday scholars, "Pleasant Paths for Little Feet." All are published at 1d., and are well calculated to give a stimulus to those interested in Sunday-school work.

Recent additions to the "Sunday Library," for Young People, published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton at 2s. 6d. per vol., are ALICE THORNE; or, a Sister's Work. A thoroughly healthy, happy story of a simple, beautiful life; may safely be given as a Christmas gift, prize, or Sunday-school award. THE MELVILLE FAMILY and their Bible-readings, by HARRIET WARNER ELLIS. Truly delightful and instructive chats on the Bible. But is not it better to avoid argument in religious things when we are writing for quite young people. LIZZIE SYDENHAM, and the Wrong Turning, by Mrs. J. M. SANDY, presents, in quite the old-fashioned style, the good and the evil in two kinds of lives, one of which had the "advantage of sound religious education," and benefited by them; the other had them, but threw them away, and many "evil consequences" followed. The moral of the book is very good, and the characters life-like.

HINDUISM PAST AND PRESENT. By J. MURRAY MITCHELL. M.A., L.L.D. 4s. Religious Tract Society. Only a ripe Oriental scholar and observant traveller could compress into 280 pages so much matter in so interesting a form. Hindoo religious writings, before and after the influx of Buddhism, are clearly analysed; the older portion is contrasted with Old Testament teachings, the later portion with the doctrines of Christ and his Apostles. The writer shows conclusively that whatever their form, polytheism, with a taint of pantheism, but with no vestige of monotheism, underlies Hindoo systems from first to last. He considers modern Hindooism more corrupt than classic Paganism, and the efforts of Hindoo reformers, however earnest, quite unable to purify it. But, spite of these obstacles, fortified by the pernicious flood of infidel treatises from England and America, he predicts the speedy and glorious triumph of the Cross. This valuable book should stand by Muir's "Islam" on every Christian student's bookshelf.

A new SHORTHAND BIBLE. Nearly twenty years ago Mr. Isaac Pitman lithographed and published the complete Bible in the phonographic character. It has long been "out of print," and since its issue a new generation of phonographers has arisen. Mr. H. Ford, of The Reporter's Journal, has undertaken to write the transfers of a new edition of the Scriptures, and we have received the first part from the publisher, Mr. McCaskie, 10, High-street, Marylebone, W. The writing is very neat and correct, and the lithography is on the whole well executed. The book, which is to be issued in sixpenny monthly parts, will be welcomed and prized by many phonographers. Mr. McCaskie also supplies a singularly handy and useful phonographic multum in parvo, in the shape of a nickel silver pocket ink bottle, with penholder and imitation gold pen (price 1s. 6d.). The pen is sold separately at sixpence and eightpence, and is really excellent value at the price. A tourist's penholder with similar pen costs ninepence.

Trimnell (1s.), from the same firm, is a collection of nineteen carols, simply arranged and suitable for family or choir. "THE LUTE"—containing anthems for Christmas—numbers 23, and 35, each 2d. MR. SHRIMPTON'S "LETTER TO YOUNG WOMEN."—The Author is now prepared to circulate this letter gratis to any Christian worker among young women. He will be pleased to forward as many as can be judiciously distributed.—Applications to be addressed to Mr. John Shrimpton, 38, Lincoln's-inn-fields, London.

Mission and other Appeals.

RESCUE WORK IN SOUTH LONDON.—Help is much needed by the friends at the Deaconess' Home, Effra road, Brixton, for requisite alterations in the temporary shelter they have opened for the reception of young women rescued from an evil life. Contributions may be sent to the Lady Superintendent.

PORTUGUESE MISSION SCHOOL, Madeira.—A sale of work in aid of the Food Fund connected with this school will take place in January next Friends in England are invited to send parcels of useful fancy articles to arrive in Madeira not later than January 8 Parcels should be addressed to Mrs. W. Smart, 183, Rua dos Ferreiros, Funchal, Madeira.

HOLLOWAY EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Sir,—During the past three winters free breakfasts on Sunday mornings have been given to the poor at the Mission Hall 3 1, Holloway-road We are anxious to continue this work Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. H. Putterill, 94, Frederick-street, Caledonian-road.

RESCUE WORK. Among those who have given themselves to this branch of Christian effort is Mr. Bodker, 30 Holland-road, Brixton, S W. He is desirous of opening some place in South London which would form a temporary shelter for any who are willing to quit the paths of vice and be restored to an honest and virtuous life. Mr. Bodker is well recommended by those who know his work.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S FRIEND MISSION.—We are anxious to start our free meals amongst the destitute children of the East end, and should feel pleased to receive any articles of left-off clothing, coals or food, such as rice, peas, biscuits, potatoes, or any vegetables. Through the help of friends upwards of 5 ,000 free meals were given last year.—Mr. GEO. FULLER, Superintendent, 1, Follett-street, Poplar, E.

CLAPTON.—The poverty and distress around us are very appalling and is on the increase. We are therefore very anxious to aid as many as possible through the winter. If your kind readers would send us gifts of rice, coals, tea, sugar, old garments, blankets, or funds we should do our utmost to distribute them wisely. All gifts will be acknowledged by return of post—Yours in the Master's service, (Pastor) JOHN BAIN, Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Lower Clapton, E.

COSTERMONGERS' CHRISTIAN MISSION.—Mr. W. J. Orsman, Milton House, Shacklewell-green, Hackney, E., writes: The Irish Stew Soup Kitchen is immensely popular, but it involves a loss of nearly £5 a week as a quart of substantial soup of meat and vegetables with a thick slice of bread, is sold for a penny Last Friday 378 poor women and children were supplied and at least 2 0 others were unsuccessful We hope to help as usual many of the Lord's poor, sick, and aged at Christmas, besides a dinner to 300 poor children in Costers' Hall on Christmas Day.

KINGSLAND.—An appeal is made on behalf of the poor people attending the Hope Mission, Shap-street, Laburnam-street, Kingsland-road (connected with the Shoreditch Tabernacle) Many of them are extremely poor and almost destitute owing to scarcity of work and other burdens. It is our aim to provide food, firing and clothes for those who would otherwise have none Gifts of left-off clothing, coals, food, &c., will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Miss Mills, 43, Wilton-road, Dalston, or to Mr. Thomas Edward Howe, 102, Broke-road, Dalston, E.—I am, on behalf of the Committee, yours sincerely, THOMAS E HOWE, Conductor.

GIFFORD HALL MISSION.—For many years past well-cooked, substantial dinners, with materials for a comfortable tea, have been distributed at Gifford Hall on Christmas morning, to be afterwards consumed by the poor at their own homes. The neighbourhood is densely populated, and very poor, and the Mission is putting forth a number of beneficent operations. During the year upwards of 6 ,000 penny dinners and free bread-and-milk breakfasts have been supplied to the poorest Board school children, many of whom, but for this agency, would go breakfastless or dinnerless to school. Help is earnestly asked for the Christmas and penny dinners, and the other benevolent work of the mission, and will be gratefully acknowledged by Benjamin Clarke, Superintendent, Hampden House, Crouch End, N.

DISTRESS AMONG SEAMEN.—Dear Sir,—There is great distress among the seafaring population in the East-end. Owing to the depression in shipping many men are unable to obtain employment, and are turned adrift to the tender mercies of the world The Seamen's Christian Friend Society has for many years been accustomed to give two meals a day and lodgings at night to deserving destitute seamen of all nations. This year, however, we have been unable to meet the expenses of the general mission work and consequently are not able to give relief as usual to those who have no home or lodging On Wednesday week seventy destitute seamen were supplied with food at the Society's reading-rooms, and many had to be turned away though they had no lodging for the night It was pitiable to see the despair depicted on the faces of those whom we were unable to help. Contributions may be sent to Rev G J Hill, 237, Commercial-road, E.—Yours faithfully, W. GILCHRIST.

Notes on Daily Readings.

THURSDAY, DEC. 17.—EXODUS XIII.

2.—Sanctify unto Me all the firstborn.—It was fitting that those who had been sheltered by the blood, and thereby saved from the judgment that was executed that night throughout the land of Egypt upon all the firstborn, should in virtue of their deliverance belong to the Lord, the firstborn of men as his servants, the firstborn of cattle as victims. The Levites were afterwards consecrated to the service of the tabernacle in lieu of the firstborn (Numb. iii. 12); but in making this exchange the Lord distinctly explained his claim to the firstborn: "On the day that I smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt I hallowed unto Me all the firstborn of Israel." Believers constitute "the Church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven," and they, too, are not their own, but have been bought with a price, and should glorify God in their bodies and spirits, which are his. They, too, were hallowed unto God in the day that He smote "the first born among many brethren."

9.—It shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes.—"Modern Israelites generally allege this precept as a justification for the use of phylacteries. Moses states distinctly the object of the precept, which was (see ver. 9) 'that the Lord's law may be in thy mouth.' The expressions may have been proverbial in the time of Moses, as they certainly were at a later period. See Prov. vi. 20—22, vii. 3, where the metaphorical sense is not questioned."—Sp. Com.

21.—The Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light.—"In this cloud Jehovah, or the angel of the Lord, the visible representative of the invisible God, under the Old Testament, was really present with the people of Israel, so that He spoke to Moses, and gave him commandments out of the cloud. In this, too, appeared the glory of the Lord (chap. xvi. 10, xl. 34; Numb. xvii. 7), the Shechinah of later Jewish theology. The fire in the pillar of the cloud was the same as that in which the Lord revealed Himself to Moses out of the bush, and afterwards descended upon Sinai, amidst thunder and lightning, in a thick cloud (xix. 16—18)."—Keil.

FRIDAY, DEC. 18.—EXODUS XIV.

3.—They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in.—"The original intention of Moses was to go towards Palestine by the wilderness: when that purpose was changed by God's direction, and they moved southwards, Pharaoh, on receiving information, was of course aware that they were completely shut in, since the waters of the Red Sea then extended to the little lakes. It is known that the Red Sea, at some remote period, extended considerably further towards the north than it does at present."—Canon Cook.

15.—Wherefore criest thou unto Me?—Whilst Moses could comfort the Israelites by his cheering words, "Fear not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord," it would seem that he himself did not enjoy the comfort which he ministered to others, for these words imply that he himself was in fear, and therefore cried unto the Lord.

22.—And the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea upon the dry ground.—We are taught in Heb. xi. 29, that "by faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land, which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned," which shows that it was relying on God's promise (ver. 16), "the children of Israel shall go on dry ground through the midst of the sea," that they trusted themselves to the opened waters, and gained the other side in safety. The Egyptians had no such promise, and therefore their crossing over was presumption, not faith. The passage of the Red Sea is compared with baptism (1 Cor. x. 2), and there is the same difference between those who by faith make a Christian profession, relying upon the promise of the Gospel, and find the blessing symbolised in baptism—death and resurrection with Christ—and those who, like the Egyptians, use the waters to their own destruction, without faith, without repentance, without Christ.

SATURDAY, DEC. 19.—EXODUS XV.

1.—He hath triumphed gloriously.—"This gives the true meaning, but not the force and grandeur of the Hebrew: literally, He is gloriously glorious."—Sp. Com.

2.—I will prepare Him a habitation.—"I will praise Him" (R.V.).—"'I will glorify Him.' Scholars agree that the Hebrew word means to celebrate with grateful, loving adoration. In fact, this sense is given by most of the ancient versions."—Canon Cook. Our translators have here followed the Rabbinical authorities, who render it, "I will build Him a sanctuary."

11.—Who is like unto Thee, O Lord, among the gods?—"A Hebrew just leaving the land in which Polytheism attained its highest development, with gigantic statues and temples of incomparable grandeur, might well on such an occasion dwell upon this consummation of the long series of triumphs by which the 'greatness beyond compare' of Jehovah was once for all established."—Canon Cook.

13.—Thou hast guided them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation—The Rationalists stupidly object that these words could not have been used at the Red Sea, as they speak of the entrance into Canaan in the past tense; but of this they are "willingly ignorant," that the language of prophecy concerning the future is often in Scripture expressed in the past tense, of which one instance may suffice, "Whom He justified, them He also glorified" (Rom. viii. 30). The spiritual meaning is well expressed in a hymn of Hart's:—

"Led forth by God's right hand,
  And guided by his power;
We reach the promised land,
  And triumph evermore.
'Twas this land Moses had in view,
  Of this he sang, and we sing too."

25.—A tree which when he had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet.—The bitter waters of curse are turned into the sweet waters of blessing by the cross of Christ. "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree: that the blessing of Abraham might come . . . . through Jesus Christ" (Gal. iii. 13).

SUNDAY, DEC. 20.—EXODUS XVI.

2.—The whole congregation of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron.—The murmurings at Marah (xv. 24) were quickly silenced by the tree being pointed out as a remedy for the bitter waters; but the spirit of murmuring soon broke out again, this time caused by hunger, or the apprehension of it. While this outbreak of discontent brings out the rebellious spirit of the people, it also serves to bring out the forbearance and grace of the Lord, who sends them at once that evening quails to satisfy their hunger, and in the morning the first supply of manna—that food which was to constitute their staple support during their desert wanderings. This "bread from heaven" was a type of the Lord Jesus, as He Himself teaches (John vi.), and ministered as it was to them in connection with the morning dew (ver. 14), the type of the Holy Spirit (Hosea xiv. 5), it beautifully sets forth Christ as the Bread of life ministered to the soul by the Holy Spirit, whose office it is to take of the things of Christ and show them to us. It was to be gathered early, as to which it has been well remarked: "Each one had to rise early and seek his daily portion. So it is with the people of God now. The heavenly manna must be gathered fresh every morning. Yesterday's manna will not do for to-day, nor to-day's for to-morrow. We must feed upon Christ every day, with fresh energy of the Spirit, else we shall cease to grow. Moreover, we must make Christ our primary object. We must seek Him "early," before other things have had time to take possession of our poor susceptible hearts. The new life in the believer can only be nourished and sustained by Christ. "As the living Father hath sent Me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me (John vi. 57)."

18.—He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack.—"The result is undoubtedly represented as miraculous. The Jewish interpreters understand by this statement that whatever quantity each person had gathered, when he measured it in his tent, he found that he had just as many omers as he needed for the consumption of his family; and this is probably the true meaning."—Sp. Com.

MONDAY, DEC. 21.—EXODUS XVII.

6.—Behold, I will stand before thee there upon the rock of Horeb.—"The doctrine of the Trinity is here most strikingly shadowed forth. Jehovah said to Moses, 'I will stand before thee there,' &c. Now, when we read that 'that rock was Christ,' and farther, when under the emblem of living, refreshing, and satisfying waters is shadowed forth the Holy Ghost, I think we are warranted in saying that we have here a most precious type that the salvation of God's people is the covenant work of one covenant Jehovah—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."—W. H. Krause.

Thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink.—The rod of Moses, with which he smote the rock, may well represent the avenging stroke of Divine justice with which He was smitten who was made "under the law." "Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of Hosts: smite the shepherd" (Zech. xiii. 7). The waters which gushed forth represent that water of life—salvation ministered by the Holy Spirit—which we are invited to "take freely."

11.—When Moses held up his hand Israel prevailed, and when he let down his hand Amalek prevailed.—"Amalek stands before us the type of the flesh. He was the grandson of Esau. He was the first who opposed Israel after their baptism in the cloud and in the sea. The believer carries about with him that which answers to Amalek, 'the flesh,' 'the old man,' 'the carnal mind' (Rom. vi. 6, viii. 7; Gal. v. 17)."—C. H. M. The intercession of Christ is typified by Moses' hands held up by Aaron and Hur. This intercession is constant and never-wearying, but we enjoy its results when we in prayer draw nigh to God through Him (see Heb. iv. 14—16).

TUESDAY, DEC. 22.—EXODUS XVIII.

9.—And Jethro rejoiced for all the goodness which the Lord had done to Israel.—"A millennial scene! The Jew stands forth as the great earthly witness of Jehovah's faithfulness, his mercy and his power. This is what the Jew has been in bygone ages, it is what he is now, and what he will be world without end. The Gentile reads in the book of God's dealings with the Jew his deepest lessons. He traces the marvellous history of that peculiar and elect people, 'a people terrible from their beginning hitherto.' He sees thrones and empires overturned, nations shaken to their centre, everyone and everything compelled to give way, in order to establish the supremacy of that people on whom Jehovah has set his love. 'Now I know,' he says, 'that the Lord is greater than all gods: for in the thing wherein they dwelt proudly He was above them' (ver. 11). Such is the confession of the Gentile when the wondrous page of Jewish history lies open before him."—C. H. M.

24.—So Moses hearkened to the voice of his father-in-law, and did all that he had said.—This mode of procedure is a striking contrast to all that follows from chap. xx. onwards. There the Lord directs all and leaves nothing to Moses to originate, much less to a Gentile relative of his. "See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the Mount." It would therefore almost seem as if Jethro's advice, however wise from a human point of view, was not that which Moses should have followed without at least clear direction from God, but it must be admitted that Jethro contemplated its receiving his approval in the words (v. 23), "If thou shalt do this thing, and God command thee so." At all events, legislation for Israel was premature with Sinai before them.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 23.—EXODUS XIX.

5.—If ye shall obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me, &c.—It is most important to mark the strictly conditional character of this offer on the part of Jehovah to Israel. The condition was never fulfilled in "Israel after the flesh," nor was it ever fulfilled till "the seed came to whom the promise was made." His obedience and keeping of God's covenant brought in that "everlasting righteousness," which is the ground of believers being addressed in 1 Peter ii. 9, "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people," &c. Here there is neither "if" nor condition, for those addressed are in Christ, in whom the condition has been fulfilled. When the priesthood of all believers, as asserted in this and other passages, is urged against the pretensions of sacerdotalism, it is sometimes replied, Israel was a "kingdom of priests," or a "royal priesthood," and yet they had also the special priesthood of Aaron's family. But this is a mistake. Israel was offered the privilege of royal priesthood on condition of obedience to God's law. This condition they never fulfilled, and therefore never obtained the privilege. Christians are priests by virtue of their standing in Christ, and need no other priesthood betwixt them and God than his.

22.—And let the priests also.—"The Levitical priesthood was not yet instituted, but sacrifices had hitherto been offered by persons who were recognised as having the right or authority; according to the very probable account of the Rabbinical writers, these were the first-born or the heads of families, until they were superseded by the Aaronic priesthood."—Sp. Com.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS.

CASE of Mr. A. CHAPPLE.

This patient, living at 2, Carlton-villas, Grace's-road, CAMBERWELL, came to Coombe Lodge on the 20th of Nov. last. Examined by Dr. Brown. "Case of broncho phthisis; right lung affected."

The patient had been laid up from the preceding March, when he had congestion of both lungs, followed by bronchitis in June.

Present symptoms: "Cough severe; expectoration green, and streaked with blood; pains in the side, and short breathing; had lost both flesh and strength."

It was two months before there was any visible improvement. At the end of January symptoms began to abate, and on examination the right lung was found to be "decidedly better."

After about eight visits of this patient to Coombe Lodge, and regular continuance of medicine until May of this year, he had gained two stones in weight, and every symptom of disease had nearly vanished.

On the 24th of August he writes: "I am happy to say I still keep well. I have been in the country in the neighbourhood of Dorking, and walked up Leith-hill, about 900 feet high, and some ten miles there and back. I shall only be too happy if any reference to my case should encourage any like sufferers to apply to you."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

DEC. 14th,
£500 IN DONATIONS WILL SUFFICE
TO CLEAR THE EXPENSES OF THIS YEAR'S WORK.

TO look back and mark the way along which it has pleased the Lord to lead is to awaken feelings of anksgiving. It was in the year 1851 I was led to make my first efforts to RESCUE POOR PRODIGALS out a TERRIBLE COLONY OF CRIME: the reception was hostile to a degree, but the Lord aciously overruled all for good, and every year since that time He has been pleased to INCREASE PPORTUNITIES for rescuing Young Women and Girls and year by year SUPPLYING requisite UNDS to carry on the Work, often in a very MARVELLOUS MANNER!

HE WORK OF THIS YEAR WILL SOON BE COMPLETED.

Nearly One Thousand Three Hundred Young Women and Girls have been brought by various misonary agencies this year, many very young and simply in moral peril, others to be reclaimed; and every itable case has been welcomed into the Homes or Open-all-Night Refuge, to the utmost capacity of the stitution.

A large proportion were Country Girls: others were orphans.

To summarize admissions since 1857, when this Institution was formed:—

OMES have been established in VARIOUS PARTS of LONDON, into which

There have been admitted	10,357
To the Open-all-Night Refuge	11,666

Many of these have been saved even in the silent hours of night.

The inmates are FED, LODGED and CLOTHED; and, above all, instructed to seek the alvation of their Never-dying Souls through the merits of the Lord Jesus Christ. After ey have been reclaimed, they are usually provided with Situations as Domestic Servants d watched over.

£12 10s. is required daily throughout the year to maintain the Homes and Open-all-ight Refuge, but during many months the income FALLS FAR SHORT of the expenses; wever, the Committee never restrict their WORK OF MERCY.

READER, KINDLY CONTRIBUTE towards the amount required.

Collecting Cards (for Collecting £1); will 50 Readers of "The Christian" ke one each?

Contributions will be thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, "The Christian," , Paternoster Buildings, E.C., and FRANCIS NICOLLS, Esq., of the Committee, 14, Old wry Chambers, E.C.; or

IDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

MISSION TO YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS.

This MISSION, by God's blessing, is RESCUING YOUNG WOMEN and GIRLS both in London and the Provinces. PENITENTS are immediately PLACED in HOMES, or otherwise assisted.

The earnestness that is manifested at this time in the rescue of JUVENILE OUTCASTS has LONG OCCUPIED e attention of the Committee. MERE CHILDREN have been gathered in to MIDNIGHT MEETINGS. To ACHIEVE ORE in this direction greater co-operation is necessary.

Christians who have NEVER SUBSCRIBED to this Mission of Mercy are URGENTLY APPEALED to, to help by nations and prayerful sympathy.

£5 will meet the expenses of a Meeting and Mission a district. 50 such Meetings will (D.V.) be held this winter.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,

10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. SHERRARD, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

The debts are heavy, and unless these can be paid, and the weekly expenses provided for, the wards must be closed. The Treasurer, GEORGE HERRING, Esq., has promised to add one-third, i.e., one guinea for every three guineas sent in answer to this urgent appeal.

ALFRED CRASKE, Secretary.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—I do ask you with all humility, but earnestly, to help me at this time in helping others. My parish is, I truly believe, the poorest in South Wales, and my doors are every day sought by needy, starving suppliants whom I know personally and desire to relieve with coal, food, or clothing; but my own scanty means do not enable me. "THOU ART WITH ME."

(Ps. xxiii. 4)

A New Year's Address.

By JOHN E. LINNELL,

Vicar of Pavenham, Bedford.

Neatly printed on Tinted Paper, suitable for enclosing in Letters, or for General Distribution.

1s. per Dozen; 7s. per 100.

"Yes, with me to supply my wants in every time of need; with me to deliver my soul in every time of danger; with me to comfort a sinking heart in every season of sorrow; with me to give thy gracious guidance at every time of perplexity; with me to be my sure defence in every hour of temptation: with me—yes, ever with me!

"And 'THOU' art with me. Well for the soul that through this word gets the eye firmly fixed on Jesus. Let it never be recalled; and if ever drawn away, let it return to Him again. How necessary to one's peace to be looking unto Him! 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee; because he trusteth in Thee.' The peace of salvation can only be enjoyed while the eye is resting on Jesus."—Extract.

What shall we say to these things?—Special.

THE night was dark, and the dimly lighted streets of small houses were breathing an atmosphere of quietness.

We are in the neighbourhood of Millwall and the Docks. The flaming "Publics" at various corners were opened by Act of Parliament at six p.m. this evening, after a brief interval of closing, for it is Sunday night. And now the clock stands to the hour of seven.

Grinding poverty is hiding its head at this hour, save what may be seen behind the bar doors. The usual groups of pitiful bare-footed children are just now off the streets, and one could almost imagine even here in East London it may be the Sabbath evening but for the many open shops without the least urban respect of two shutters up and four down, and the never-ceasing cries of the street hawkers.

Soon we reach the object of our search. It is called the People's Hall, and situated in Mellish Street. This is one of the Mission Halls attached to the N.E. London Gospel Mission, of which there are six altogether.

But let us pause to remark here how seven years ago there sat on a seat in a Mission room, where now in the after-meeting one of the Evangelists of the aforesaid Mission was following up his preaching by verbal instruction and personal advice, a young man who had had a terrible past. This fallen one had now been made to tremble at the prospect of a more terrible future, were his evil courses still pursued.

The poor prodigal listened to the words of hope that were being pressed upon the attention of his fellow-listener near him, and the notes of mercy and grace fell upon his self-condemned heart with power, and brought with them rest and peace as he laid hold by faith upon the promise, "All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid upon Him (the Lord Jesus) the iniquity of us all."

Henceforth he became a new man, and after serving in the Mission ranks for some years as a reliable voluntary Christian worker, he was put in charge about three years ago with the conduct and care of the "People's Mission Hall" here.

But we come now to the door, and find a well-lighted room or "Hall," well filled with poor men and women, and more outside, for whom to-night there is no room, and they must be turned away from the doors.

But our wonder is great at seeing so many, as the close and already stifling atmosphere makes us think minutes rather than hours preferable in such a place. The white-washed joists and timbers are only a few feet from our head, and here, with this intolerable low ceiling in a building some sixty feet by sixteen, are crowded about 250 human beings every Sunday night, and large numbers several times during the week. We were not surprised to hear that faints are frequent, and that the place should earn the euphemism "The Turkish Bath," while, to add to the discomfort, the sanitary defects are such that after every storm the floor is flooded with water.

Week by week these poor people, and their earnest friend the evangelist, are pleading with the directors of the Mission to do something.

But their hands are tied with an already large adverse balance, so that it is an actual fact that while the friends at Millwall are appealing for a plain and simple new building to worship in, the directors are thinking it not impossible that the question of keeping open the present "shed" will soon be before them.

Surely in these days of vice, profligacy, blasphemy, and irreligion, this would be none other than a calamity.

Will those who would help sustain the present work, and render it soon possible to replace the same with the sorely needed new premises, kindly send their contributions to the Editor of The Christian, or to the Superintendent, N.E. London Gospel Mission,

Mr. WILLIAM CHORLEY,
2, Marquess Grove,
Canonbury, N.

Bankers—
Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

P.S.—We gladly mention that about £20 was received last winter from Readers of The Christian, and spent in providing free meals for the hungry unemployed dock labourers at Millwall. The cry of these and thousands more met with in our visitation are again in our ears.

The Yearly Report is now ready, and will be gladly sent upon application. Auditors: Messrs. Jones, Hill & Vellacott, Chartered Accountants, 1, Finsbury Circus, E.C.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

The late Right Hon. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G., one of its warmest supporters from its commencement, lately testified of the work of this Mission:—

"Of all the Associations in London, I do not know of one more deserving of commendation and support."—Vide Speech at Kensington Town Hall.

SAMUEL MORLEY, Esq., M.P., says:—"I am satisfied that the people (using the word in its broadest sense) are tired of being used for the purpose of swelling denominations. I believe they were never more ready earnestly to listen to the preaching of the Gospel, not even in the Master's time, than they are now, when it is presented on its own intrinsic merits. This Evangelistic Mission endeavours so to preach the Gospel, and has been successful in so doing; thus I am quite prepared to avow myself a hearty partner in the concern, and to press for an amount of support the Mission has never yet received. I believe that we are bound to secure the freedom of the workers from financial anxieties. We are bound to rise to the necessities of the case with which we are dealing; if so, the question of funds will be very secondary indeed. For what are the few thousand pounds for which we are asked when compared with the religious needs of the people amongst whom the Mission is labouring, and whose case it is endeavouring to meet?"

FUNDS ARE MUCH NEEDED AT THE PRESENT TIME.

Contributions will be gratefully received towards the following Funds:—

I. For the GENERAL EXPENSES of the LONDON MISSION, embracing Evangelistic Work—
  1. In several TENTS during the Summer.
  2. In Halls, Theatres, and other Buildings.
  3. For assisting small Missions in various parts of the Metropolis.

II. For EVANGELISTIC EFFORTS in COUNTRY TOWNS and VILLAGES, AND ABROAD.

III. The BUILDING FUND for the Erection of Halls in Needy Districts.

IV. For the PERSONAL EXPENSES of EVANGELISTS and MISSIONARIES labouring in connection with the Mission.

V. For FREE TEAS, DORCAS, COAL, and GENERAL RELIEF FUND.

VI. For COLPORTAGE MISSION for Circulating the Scriptures and Christian Literature, with Bible Carriage, &c.

VII. For FREE DISTRIBUTION of TRACTS and GOSPEL PAPERS in Public Parks, Streets, and at Excursions, &c.

VIII. HOUSE OF REST, HASTINGS, FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS IN THE HOME AND FOREIGN MISSION FIELDS.

IX. PROPOSED RESCUE HOME FOR FALLEN GIRLS, brought under the influence the Mission.

Donors will please state to which of the above funds they wish their donations to be applied. They will also oblige by adding name and address (as it should be written), not for publication, but in order that a receipt may be sent in due form, and the Report when issued.

Cheques should be crossed "London and County Bank," and Post Office Orders made payable at the General Post Office.

Should no acknowledgment of contributions sent be received within one week, friends are particularly requested to write again on the matter.

Donations may be sent to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

C. RUSSELL HURDITCH.

All communications should be addressed to 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's-wood, N.W.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,400 Poor Boys and Girls.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the Annual Sale on behalf of the Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE,

for as yet but very little has been received? Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale, remember that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby-clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as LAST YEAR, that is to say,

Instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End during the month of December, as formerly, all the Goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque to any part of the country.

Ladies ordering these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes;" for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End of London.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase boxes with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the present season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the New Hall of the "Edinboro' Castle."

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children, to co-operate with him in this new plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed, will be ready for transmission on the 10th of December, and can be despatched on receipt of order to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (Prepaid), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

The TRADE MANAGER,
18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying tothe fisher men the message of Divine mercy and pardonin g love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

Instituted 1772.
President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P., S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C., and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary

British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

This Society undertakes a work beyond the aim and capability of ordinary Missionary Societies. It is founded on an unsectarian basis, and receives its support from Christians of all denominations. Its Committee and Agents belong to several Christian bodies, and its Honorary Secretaries are A. Saphir, D.D., and J. H. Rigg, D.D.

It has upwards of 100 who carry the Gospel to the Jews in England, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Russia, and Turkey. Tracts and copies of the Scriptures are circulated. Many Jews have by this Society been led to believe that "Jesus is the Christ." Much good has been done among the thousands of Jews in London by the Missionaries, by the House of Call, and by the new Mission House, with its important Medical Missions.

Increased Funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Rev. J. Dunlop, at the Office, 96, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, London.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

119, COPENHAGEN STREET, N.

Patron:

His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Home, now in the 29th year of its existence, is almost wholly dependent on voluntary aid. It accommodates 100 boys, either unmanageable or destitute. Their industrial training fits them for situations on leaving. The annual income is far short of expenditure; and the severe loss, owing to the recent destructive fire at the Home, has seriously increased the deficiency. To meet this, the Committee earnestly appeal for help.

HOME FOR AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND WOMEN,

Mansion House, Hanley Road, Hornsey Rise, London, N.

Funds are very urgently needed for the maintenance of thirty-two inmates; their ages range from 50 to 91 years. Several have outlived all their relatives. In the midst of so much noble work of rescue, will friends also kindly remember the Lord's aged poor and afflicted children, especially at this season of the year, when age and its infirmaties, added to blindness, need so much extra care and warmth? It would cheer the Committee if funds would enable them to give some Christmas comforts extra. Contributions thankfully received by Henry and Ann Bright, Hon. Superintendents; Rev. J. F. Osborne, Hon. Secretary, Office at the Home; or by the Editor of The Christian.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED. COLLECTING CARDS ON APPLICATION

A REVIEW.

Dear Friends,

It is now 15 years since I began these labours of love amongst the street-arabs of our vast Metropolis, but I feel just now, I think more than ever, how responsible we are to make full use of the opportunities God graciously gives us of being "workers together with Him" in the salvation of these precious souls for whom Christ died. When I gathered a few uncared-for boys around me night by night in a little cottage, or later on when we housed our one boy the night our Home was opened, it never dawned upon me that I should ever find 250 boys depending upon me, under God, day by day, for shelter, food, clothes, and all they need in life.

A very large proportion of the help sent to us for Christian work amongst our juvenile home-heathen is received in the latter part of December and the early part of January. I know that, as far as one can foresee, our usefulness right away till next winter will to a great extent be determined by the measure of sympathy and support Christian friends may be moved to give to the work in our Homes during the next few weeks. My heart's anxiety that the important work of the winter months should not be crippled by absolute poverty constrains me to lay before you our present position.

We have at present about 250 boys in our three Homes (here, Greenwich, and at Ramsgate), but we could accommodate (by filling up vacancies at Ramsgate), 50 more little street wanderers. We have undertaken to build, and hope to have it finished in the spring, a Distributing Home in Toronto, to receive 100 boys at a time. This will enable us to transplant from the Mother Country to the Queen Colony about 120 or 150 boys every year.

Suffer me to put before you the following suggestive items:

£50	will provide complete beds and bedding for 50 boys.
£15	,, maintain a boy for one year.
£10	,, cover the entire cost of one boy's emigration.
£5	,, feed 250 boys for one day.
£1	,, pay for bed and bedding complete for one little street-arab.
10/-	,, enable us to gather 20 homeless boys for a supper and perhaps rescue some of them from the streets in this way.
5/-	,, give 40 boys in our Homes a good breakfast.
2/6	,, provide a nice Christmas dinner for 6 waifs in our "Little Wanderers' Home."

Will you, dear Friends, help us in our winter campaign, that when the spring comes round we may have a fine band of well-trained lads to send off to the happy homes waiting for them in Canada? Nice Collecting Cards can be had by applying to me. Every little helps.

Yours faithfully,

J. W. C. Fegan

"A VOICE FROM ITALY."—The November issue of this periodical, published three times a year, contains notices of evangelical work done in that country. The chief interest in the current number centres round the report of the Waldensian Synod, with the proposals for union with the Free Churches. Letters from Luserna, Ivrea, Valence, and Pisa tell of the progress of mission work in these places. The pamphlet may be obtained of the Secretary, Office of the Waldensian Church Missions in Italy, 118, Pall Mall, S.W.

Mrs. Booth to S. S. B. G.—The purport of your letter most distressing; but, after prayerful consideration, I see no alternative for you but to come out of your present position. Not only the interests of your own soul, but those of others concerned, demand this course at your hands. God will take care of consequences. None ever trusted in Him and were confounded.

WATERCRESS AND FLOWER GIRL MISSION,

11 & 12, CLERKENWELL-CLOSE, E.C.

Extract from "Southampton Times," December 5, 1885.

FLOWER GIRL MISSION

WE in London know well the army of flower sellers who in the season of "blithesome buds" beset us at every corner, offering their "posies of lilies or roses," and now that all nature is sleeping, and the fields and gardens are alike desolate and bare, there is little for these poor girls to do. The Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission and Flower Brigade is just now doing some of its best work. The flower girls who belong to it are well cared for when their season of prosperity is on; but now that the bitter trials of winter are coming upon them, they are taught the trade of artificial flower-making, and every endeavour is made to save them from the evil influences of their street life. Many of them, after a period of such experience, are trained for service, and taught domestic work of various kinds. I had a little boxful of the artificial flower work sent to me the other day by Lady Henderson, whose husband is the well-known head of the police, and who is in dee sympathy with the objects of this Flower Girls' Brigade.

Over three hundred little flower sellers have been taken from the streets since 1880, and about forty are now in training. Visitors are welcomed at the Home in Clerkenwell-close every day but Saturday, where they will see the girls busily at work—the elder ones make sprays of flowers, and I have as a specimen a full-blown chrysanthemum before me, besides many single snowdrops, violets, and buttercups, the pleasing work of very tiny fingers. Mr. Groom, the hon. sec. of the Society, is anxious to interest everyone in this branch of distinctly rescue work. The late good Lord Shaftesbury was President of the Society, and he classed it with the best and most useful Societies, and expected to see good results from it for our girls. Mr. Groom's address is 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell.

The work of the Mission embraces early visiting at the markets and streets; theatres, music halls, &c., at night. Home, Sick, and Poor Visiting, Open-air Services, and Tract Distribution, Sabbath and Week Evening Services, Sunday-school, Free Evening School, Hot Meat Dinners for Poor Children, Clothing Club, Penny Bank, Emily Loan Fund, Sewing Classes, Bands of Hope, Free Breakfasts to Poor Women in the Markets, Lodgings for the Homeless, Mothers' Meetings, &c., &c.

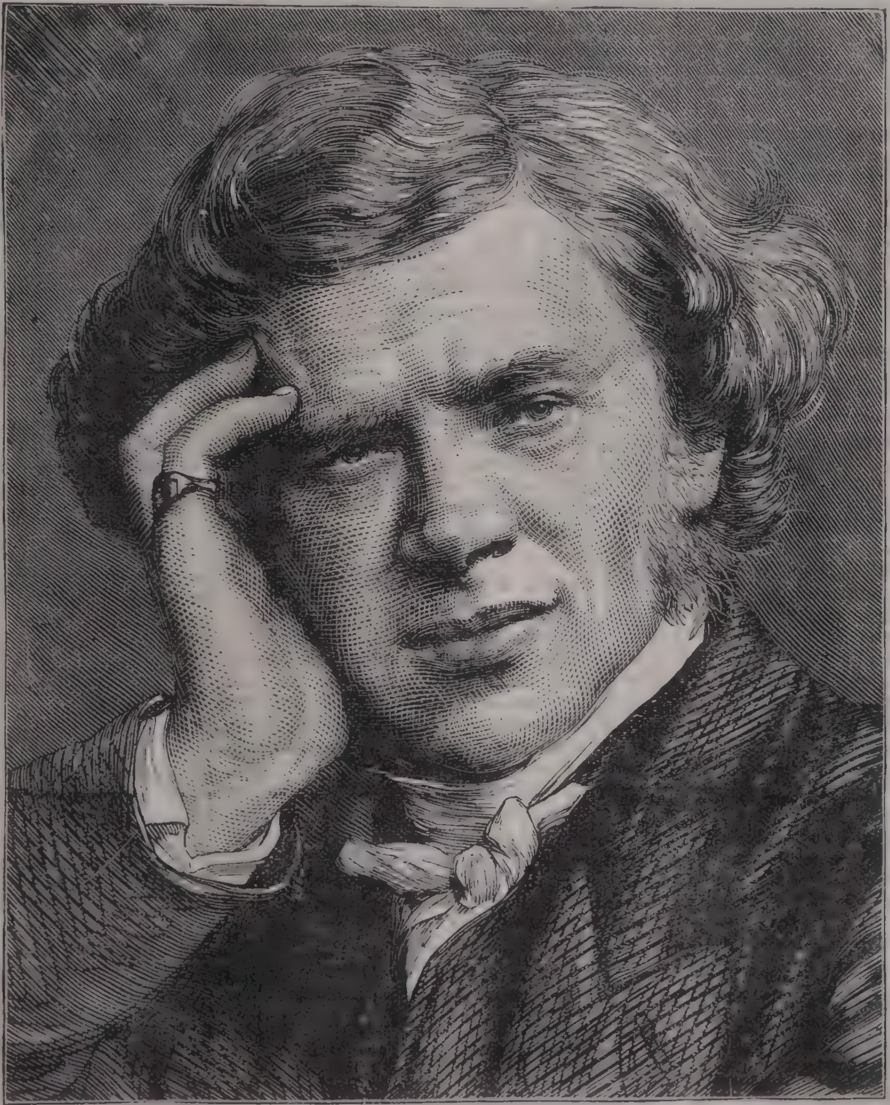
THE LATE DEAN HOWSON.



ON the evening of Monday week, Dr. J. S. Howson, Dean of Chester, breathed his last, at Bournemouth, at the age of sixty-nine years. After a very successful University course at Cambridge, he acted for some time as tutor, and in this capacity had under his charge a few young men who have since become eminent.

Skilled as a teacher, Mr. Howson, who had become M.A., took the part of assistant-classical master in the Upper School of Liverpool College, and shortly afterwards succeeded to the head mastership, which, however, he only held for a brief period. Rev. W. J. Conybeare had been for some time Principal of the College, and on his retirement, Rev. J. S. Howson succeeded him in the post. His connection with Mr. Conybeare in the College had one important result: this was, the association of the two scholarly clergymen in the production of the important work on the "Life and Epistles of St. Paul," by which the names of both will be principally remembered. With the exception, perhaps, of the work of Mr. T. Lewin, the publication of which preceded Conybeare and Howson's by about two years, the conjoint work of the latter was the most important contribution to the history and work of the Apostle of the Gentiles since the issue of Paley's "Horæ Paulinæ," nearly a century ago. Archdeacon Farrar's well-known volumes on the same subject are, of course, of recent date.

Rev. J. S. Howson took the degree of D.D. in 1861. Dr. Howson, whose health had suffered somewhat from the fag of academic life, resigned his Principalship in the winter of 1865, and was soon afterwards appointed to the vicarage of St. Peter and St. Paul, Wisbeach, and in a few months subsequently became also examining chaplain to the Bishop of Ely.

In 1867 Dr. Howson was created Dean of Chester, an appointment which met with general approval, and which his subsequent career very amply justified. Urbane, scholarly, and liberal, Dr. Howson won general confidence and regard. Less pronounced than the excellent Dean Goode, his scholarship was nevertheless like that of the umquile Dean of Ripon, called into service in defence of the principles of the Protestant Reformation and against the Romeward tendencies of one party in the English Church.

In the January number of The Quiver there is a paper by the late Dean, entitled "The Opening of the Year," a comprehensive exposition of the saying of our Lord: "No man having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new." We quote some of the closing sentences:—

"This saying has a special force in all times of change. It was a time of change when the parable was spoken; and ours, too, are emphatically times of change. Now there is a natural reluctance to alter, even when we are altering for the better. We cast lingering looks behind even when we are aware it is better to go on. And this feeling is not altogether to be blamed. Our times are times of risk; and, beyond doubt, great wisdom is required of those who are responsible for guiding the minds of their contemporaries. Such thoughts are present to us with fresh force at such a moment as this, when we are sensibly passing from one year to another. The old year has had its troubles and sorrows. Yet we linger over it with a certain fondness. It is full of touching memories; and we are tempted to have sad forebodings of mind regarding the year that is coming; and we say, 'the old is better.' At all events, we say, 'the old is good.' And surely a thankful heart justifies us in saying this. If we cannot yet feel sure that the new will be 'better,' we are confident that the new will be 'good,' because the old was 'good.'

"Let us look genially and reasonably in both directions. We are at this moment crossing the Jordan of human life again. Moses is to be laid to rest on the mountain, but Joshua is appointed to succeed him. This day 'ye shall eat new food,' it was said at that time; 'bring forth the old because of the new.'"

GIDEON'S TRIUMPH.—I.

Judges vii.

By Rev. JOHN URQUHART, Weston-super-Mare.

HISTORY is at once the most pleasing and the most valuable of all our teachers. While the story awakens our interest and sympathy, it makes us grasp the problem of human existence with a new sense of mastery.' The multitude of trivialities which baffle our insight as we look out on human life disappear, and the great outstanding facts alone remain. We now connect sacrifices with their frequently far-off results, as well as mistake and sin with their bitter fruits. We mark how the false glory fades and the true shines out with abiding brightness. In a word, it is to the student of human life what the map of a country is to the traveller. We see at a glance whither the road on which our feet may stand will lead, and how our wished-for destination may be reached.

But it is only when we have closed the page which man has penned and open that which the Father has caused to be written for our learning that we fully know how history can serve us. Not only is it that in this map of human life the lines are bolder and clearer, nor that the limner's hand sweeps here beyond the limits at which man's halted, as at the boundaries of an unknown territory. We see deeper as well as farther. The veil is lifted from the soul's secrets. Not only do we now trace the steps of heroes; these Samsons tell us the secret of their strength, and, when that is told, we know it is a strength we too may share.

And such a tale is this of Gideon's triumph. The mode of warfare adopted by the Midianites, from whose oppression Israel now suffered, was peculiar. They did not seek to make a conquest of the country, nor to impose a tribute upon the people. Theirs was a more subtle and more galling tyranny. The Israelites were virtually made their ploughmen and their vine-dressers. While the necessary labours of the field and the vineyard were being carried on the land was left in quietness. The Israelites were allowed to plough and sow, to plant and prune in peace. But so soon as the land was clad in the rich beauty of spring, and the toiler began to rejoice in the hope of an abundant harvest, the countless hordes of men and cattle poured over the fords of the Jordan. The Israelites fled to the mountains and hid themselves in dens and caves of the earth, and, while they pined with hunger, the Midianites luxuriated in the abundance of the fruitful plains below.

This had been a frequent experience, and it was now repeated with aggravations. Not only were the Midianites there as before, but there were now banded with them the Amalekites and the "children of the East"—the Arabs of the desert. If Israel's case had been deemed hopeless when Midian alone oppressed, it was surely madness to think of resistance now. And yet this was the moment which God had chosen for his people's deliverance. For the first time the Midianites find their pathway barred. They may have laughed at Gideon and his poor 32,000 men. But ere deliverance could arise Israel's cause must seem more hopeless yet, and so Gideon had to proclaim that whosoever was fearful and afraid should return, with the result that 22,000 departed. Even the 10,000 who remained were still too many, and the people had to be further tested. The 300 who lapped were chosen, and the 9,700 who bowed down to drink were rejected. How the watchers of Midian must have laughed as they saw the Israelitish army melt away under their eyes! But that night the laughter was changed into a cry, their ordered host into a mass of struggling fugitives smiting each other in the madness of their terror.

Let us briefly trace the parallel between and then ask what this story has to tell us regarding the secret of victory.

We look out first of all, then, as Israel did, upon our foes. They knew that that land was meant to be the abode of God's people, that his was the name which should be honoured there, and his the law which should be obeyed. Our convictions are both deeper and of wider range. We claim for God not one land, but all. The kingdoms of the world ought to be and must be made the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ. The knowledge of the Lord must flood the earth as the waters flood the seas. And though this may well be called the missionary age of the Church, it is no new discovery that the world in its entirety must be claimed, and will yet be held for God. More than eighteen centuries ago it was the conviction and the hope of those who went everywhere preaching the Word. They went not only where Roman armies had first trod a pathway; they went where Roman armies had never gone. And they did not labour in vain. The fields grew green in which they toiled, and then they were covered and trampled under foot by a bloody and relentless persecution! But they still wrought on. They sowed in tears, and it seemed as if the time had at last come when they were to reap in joy. A Christian sat on the throne of the Cæsars. The doom of idolatry was pronounced. But, alas! the long-looked-for harvest became again a prey. The plains of Israel were covered not only with Midian, but also with Amalek and the children of the East. Into the churches themselves, worldliness and lust, and superstition and darkness, poured with resistless force. The light which the Lord had set in the world's midst became dark, and how great was the darkness!

From then till now the battle has continued, and

THE EARTH IS NOT YET WON FOR GOD.

There have been times when Israel appeared about to possess the land. There was the Reformation, when nations seemed to be born again; there have been movements of as mighty promise in our own land; but, just as Israel thought to reap and to rejoice, Midian again appeared. Coldness and death descended where life and ardour had been. And now, what of to-day? We have toiled long in foreign fields, and the Lord has wonderfully helped and blessed us, but the cry of the nations is not stilled, for their need is not yet met. A well-known and able missionary once said, "Twenty years and India will be won for Christ!" The twenty years have long since gone, and India is not yet won. It may be said, indeed, that eclecticism and atheism spread faster there than Christianity. In other lands the way has been marvellously opened for the messengers of peace, but as yet we have done little more than enter in. If we turn from Asia and Africa to Europe we mark the same wondrous preparation, we hear the same call. There, too, we have laboured, but we have again to own that Midian and her vast confederacy of evil cover the soil.

We look upon our own country. Are our churches all that the Lord means them to be? And what of those outside their pale? There are giant evils in the land with which we have wrestled, but which we have not overcome. We have striven to sweep away the curse of drunkenness, and to-day we are confronted by a confederacy of vested interests, of degraded appetite, of indifference and misconception, which, if we are to have regard to man only, is simply appalling. Sometimes a general commands an attack to be made in a certain quarter, not to overthrow the enemy, but to make him deploy his forces and reveal his strength. We have achieved this end, indeed, we have made the foe declare himself; but we have done little more. In regard to the great question of social purity, we have to repeat the same tale. Many were rejoicing a few weeks ago that at last their sighing and their groaning rose up in one united, clear, articulate cry which all the land must hear. It seemed as if it needed only such a cry to make the walls of this Jericho fall down; and now, in the presence of the spirit displayed by our law courts and our press, we realise perhaps for the first time the gigantic task to which we have committed ourselves.

"THE RICHEST MAN ON EARTH."

A FEW days since William Vanderbilt was the richest man on earth. In the prime of life, full of vigour, full also of the pride of power, and of far-reaching ambition, a mighty future seemed to lie before him. He either owned or controlled 10,000 miles of railway. According to his pleasure "the farmers of the Central and North Western States found their occupation profitable or not." A vast area of the trade and traffic of America flourished or declined according as he willed. Inheriting from his father not only £16,000,000 but also large business capacity, he used all his vast power only to get more. "When it became a question of which should prevail, his personal interest or that of the people at large, he fought for his own hand."

Now William Vanderbilt is dead. Suddenly the Messenger came, and suddenly he was stript bare of all that wealth and power. Could there be a more impressive illustration of our Lord's words:—"What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world?" Surely this event calls on men who are yielding to lust of gold and of the power it gives, to consider their ways. Suppose their success as great as Vanderbilt's, what of it? Was not much of his wealth tainted with the robbery that seems to be almost inseparable from great monopolies? Did he not cause myriads to toil in hardship that he might win? Taken as a whole, is not his life a gigantic failure—a most significant warning against the essential ignobleness of the most successful of mammon worshippers?

The sudden closing of such a life reveals, as by a lightning flash, the utter impotence of the great god, Get-on—the fashionable deity of our generation. It reminds us afresh that "we are not sent into this world to get on, but to get up—nearer and liker God."

THE ARTILLERY LANE MISSION has entered upon its winter's work. One great difficulty to its progress just now is the abounding poverty. The mission will be able to distribute free breakfasts on Sunday mornings throughout the trying winter season, through the kindness of the London Samaritan Society. It would gladly be the means of supplying the needy with a substantial meal during the week if the funds allowed. For about fifteen shillings, upwards of 100 cold and hungry men, women, and children may have a good supper. For about twelve years this mission has existed under the care of the present superintendent, and has proved a blessing to large numbers of the most needy and distressed ones. Mr. Finn, 14, St. Ann's-road, Stamford-hill, N., will gladly receive help.

An Old Worker.

THE UNEQUAL YOKE.

LET us hear the word of the Lord through his servant: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" (2 Cor. vi. 14). This solemn command is too often set aside in these days, as if it applied only to the young believers at Corinth in the year A.D. 60. The Church and the world, alas! are better friends now than then; as in public life it seems possible for the two to "walk together," and "be agreed," so in individual cases "righteousness and unrighteousness," "light and darkness," have fellowship in a manner never dreamt of in those early times, when the stocks were as much the insignia of the Christian religion as the "silken slippers" are to-day.

Confining our attention to matrimonial alliances, which for weal or woe, for eternity as well as time, are fraught with the most momentous issues, we desire to sound a note of warning to those whom it may concern. God's commands are explicit and frequent. "Come out, and be separate" is the plain injunction He imposes on his blood-bought family. Having brought his people out, He enforces separation: "Neither shalt thou make marriages with them [the surrounding nations]; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son" (Deut. vii. 3). With urgency the exhortation is repeated: "Depart ye, depart ye, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." The same entreaty is echoed in the text which sounds our keynote; and is applied to the marriage relation by the words,—"She is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord" (1 Cor. vii. 39).

The Word of God not only commands, but warns: "They [the idolatrous wives] will turn away thy son from following Me, that they may serve other gods" (Deut. vii. 4). "Be not deceived, evil communications corrupt good manners" (1 Cor. xv. 33). Again, "for they [the ungodly] allure . . . those that were clean escaped; for if, after they have escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning" (2 Peter ii. 18—20). Mr. Spurgeon, when warning Christian young women against marriage with the ungodly, characteristically said: "Suppose you mount a table, and stretch out your arms to one below with intent to pull him up beside you, would your efforts be likely to succeed, if he, with a far stronger grasp, exerted all his power to drag you down?" How, we would add, can the believer "dwell on high," if he is linked to a dead weight of worldliness?

Many of these Scriptural warnings point to special chastisement as an invariable result of unequal unions. Such as, "If ye shall make marriages with them [the heathen nations], they shall be snares and traps unto you, scourges in your sides, and thorns in your eyes, until ye perish from off this good land which the Lord your God hath given you" (Josh. xxiii. 12, 13). The Lord Jesus Christ tells us that "a house divided against itself cannot stand." There is an end to its domestic happiness, its dignity, and its unity. The enmity which God Himself put between the Seed of the woman and the seed of Satan is indestructible. The blood of righteous Abel was its first certificate of power. The Blood that speaketh better things than that of Abel speaks also of its bitterness. The rack, the sword, and the flame, testify to its reality. And no less do the sneer, the coldness, and the wily attempt to seduce into sin, betray the still marked personality of "Mr. Hate-Good." How true that "all who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." It is sad when the sword that the Lord Jesus sent on earth is whetted on the family hearthstone, and a "man's foes are those of his own household." This sword was wielded by Job's wife when she cried, "Curse God and die!" and was sheathed in Delilah's charms for the after wounding of Samson.

In addition to these "bosom trials," which are incidental to and inseparable from the after life of those who are "unequally yoked together," there are special calamities sent from God, as if to vindicate the slighted authority of his word. In mighty love He forces himself to smite with many corrective stripes the "servant who knew his will, and did it not." There is that in David's history which bears out the truth of this assertion. The Lord was "silent" to him after the outstanding sin of his life; save when He spoke out in sore retributive chastisement. It is not difficult to discern, through the glamour of society, the broken hearts and scattered homes, the desolated lives and embittered histories, which are the fruit of this "sowing to the flesh." A veteran in the Lord's service, who testified against the projected marriage of a young Christian girl with an unbeliever, said, "I fear you will have some trouble with your father-in-law!" The truth was brought home with power, and the union never took place.

To the hesitating believer, whose affections are bestowed on one who has no spiritual affinity with him or her, Satan comes as an angel of light, and presents the encouragement mentioned in 1 Cor. vii. 13—16. These tempted ones trust that, after being united to the object of their (not God's) choice, "they, by their chaste conversation," may win those "who obey not the word" (1 Peter iii. 1, 2). We assert, unhesitatingly, that this encouragement was alone meant for those who had been brought to the Lord after marriage with unbelievers. Many inquiries and much prayerful thought force the conviction upon us that the Lord is slow to answer prayer for the conversion of those to whom his sons and daughters ally themselves in direct violation of his command.

More than one of the Lord's people, in "talking one to another" on this subject, have expressed a desire to ascertain what success attends the pleadings of his own children who cry to Him for the salvation of those with whom they have cast in their lot, in defiance of the adverse dual testimony of the Word and the indwelling Spirit. The result of such inquiry might be much blessed in deterring other members of the redeemed family who contemplate entering into these disastrous and God-dishonouring unions.

In case of an engagement between two unconverted persons, one of whom is converted before marriage takes place, how should the believer act? God has come in between them, and his word must be obeyed. But the believer must not form another engagement, nor even break this one, unless the other voluntarily dissolves the contract. It would be far more probable that by this course, obedient to God and honourable to the unconverted one, the believer should save the unbeliever, and thus the hindrance to marriage be removed, than that such a result should be looked for after a marriage in disobedience to the Will and Word of God.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES for the PEOPLE.

A DRAWING-ROOM meeting on behalf of Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, and Mission-rooms, was held last week at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George Hanbury, 21, Portman-square. Mr. Hanbury, who presided, said he remembered something of the opposition at the beginning of the work. Many Christian people had the idea that theatres were the last places in the world where the Gospel should be preached, but those objections had been overcome, and the movement was now backed up by clergymen and ministers. In this work it was difficult to speak of great results, because the people who attended the services were migratory, but looking at the attendance he was sure that a great work had been done. He was sure that these services were the only means of reaching the poorer classes and the uneducated, and the work was one which should commend itself to every Christian.

Rev. T. C. Udall said it was one of the saddest sights to witness in the East-end of London, on a Sunday morning, the utter ignoring of religion by the great mass of the people. As an instance of the work carried on by the society, he would mention the services at the Pavilion Theatre, where sometimes on a Sunday evening there were 3000 people assembled, who came from low lodging-houses, thieves' kitchens, and the back streets of Whitechapel, who came to hear the Gospel, and who would not be welcome at church or chapel. They had in London fourteen large buildings, which were occupied at present by the Committee, most of them being in the poorest neighbourhoods. To carry on this work they wanted an income of £3000 a year. The services of those who preached were rendered without fee or reward.

Mr. J. E. Jack said he could bear his willing and honest testimony to the fact that this society was doing a good work. Referring to an objection which had been urged that people might be induced to go to a theatre on week-days through going there on a Sunday, Mr. Jack said that in his experiences he had never yet found any man who had known any person who was induced to go to a theatre to see the performances through going there to hear the Gospel, but he had known instances where people after going to hear the Gospel, had felt they could not go to the week-day performances at a theatre. He had never felt that he was standing on more hallowed ground than on the stage of the Britannia Theatre, and in the green-room he had seen people weeping for their sins. They ought to do all they could to counteract the teaching of secular halls. He appealed for £50 to re-open the Britannia Theatre on Sunday evenings.

Mr. Frank Bevan said that one of the most important parts of the work was in mission rooms, and it was their desire to plant mission rooms all over London, especially in connection with the work of the London City Mission. He appealed for support for the opening of a mission room in the Borough, at the same time trusting that Mr. Jack would get the £50 for re-opening the Britannia Theatre, towards which he would contribute £10.

Rev. Donald Fraser, D.D., and Rev. Neville Sherbrooke having spoken in support of the work of the society, Mr. H. Ehrlich, manager of the services at the Pavilion Theatre, said that almost all the churches and chapels in the neighbourhood had received workers into their congregations who had been first impressed with the truth at the Pavilion Theatre.

Mr. C. M. Sawell, in moving a vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Hanbury, said that the necessity of this work had been fully admitted by the Evangelisation Committee of the London Diocesan Conference. He asked for aid to erect the proposed memorial city mission halls in honour of Lord Shaftesbury, and said the first was to be built in Gibraltar-walk, Bethnal-green, the second in Union-street, Borough.

THE WORLD'S LAST BATTLE.*

By J. DENHAM SMITH.

"But an image of a deeper woe,
Where are breasts no joy can balm:
Anguish, peace can never calm."

"I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle."—Zech. xiv. 2.

THIS is the last battle the world will ever see. I say the last battle; for a thousand years later "a storm more dark and terrible than ever swept it before will clear the atmosphere for ever, as we see in Rev. xx. Then, God, without a war, with the awful flash of his ire, will mete out wrath upon Gog and Magog as they encompass the camp of the saints." This will be after the millennium, when "whatever latent sin or sinners there may be external to Israel and the saved nations will be swept away with a summary vengeance." Instigated by Satan, for a moment let loose from his provisional prison, they will attempt once more the subjugation of Jerusalem, but all in vain; for, instead of Jerusalem, there remains the awful Gehenna, that lake of fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

It is sweet to think of wars ceasing to the ends of the earth. When has this ever been? Who can tell what millions have been their victims?

Who can tell the miseries of the slain? and those not slain, left on the field in pain and woe, among the dead and dying, thinking of the dear ones at home, what they will feel when they read the list of the dead and missing! And then beyond death! Can we imagine with what feelings the slain in war look upon it the moment after death? Some think that the things of time must appear very diminutive when looked back upon from eternity. But no; not those that so closely bear upon eternity. It is melancholy to think for what petty causes wars have been waged, and how long the antipathy of race for race has lasted. The animosity of nations seems never to die. Men die, and their animosities die with them; but nations have long lives, and history never dies. Our Lord shows (Matt. xxiv.) how wars will go on to the end. They have gone on for four thousand years, and are going on now. Long is the catalogue of the so-called "grim glories" of this world. But there will come this last war. As to who the actors are, we are not left to conjecture.

"For," remarks another (going back to the first settlement of nations), "the descendants of Noah will in the end be ranged either under the beast or under Gog, the two principal powers." If we consult Genesis, we shall find, "By these were the isles of the Gentiles divided in their lands; in the generations of the sons of Japheth Gomer is named." The ancient divisions of Russia make "Gog, Magog, and Meshech." Gen. x., Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix., may be read as history. Singular how the names answer to history. Japheth, which signifies enlargement, was their father and ours. As with the father, so with the sons; for the name of Gog signifies extension. The chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, which signifies flowing forth, is in Hebrew Rosh. When has this empire not been extending, growing, flowing forth? We are left to no conjecture as to its future any more than as to the past. God says, concerning Rosh, or the chief prince of Meshech, "I am against thee . . . and I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thine army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armour (answering to all sorts of people that form the vast extended power), even a great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords: Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them; all of them with shield and helmet: Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands: and many people with thee . . . Thou shalt be visited; in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword [the land of Israel, with Israel restored] . . . gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste. It shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land . . . And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face" (chap xxxviii.). "Behold, I am against thee . . . and I will turn thee back, and leave but the sixth part of thee" (chap. xxxix. 1, 2); i.e. a mere remnant, as with all the other nations whom the Lord will destroy.

And what of the Western powers? Our prophet speaks of "all nations" being gathered against Jerusalem. "The avaricious hosts of these Western lands," says the same writer, "ever bent on war, will combine together with the nations of the East, indicated by 'the mule, the camel, and the ass, and all the beasts that shall be in tents'" (Zech. xiv. 15).

In what we now see in the East—the Western and Eastern armies in battle, with the camel as well as the horse—how forcibly are we reminded of what this collected multitude from the Eastern and Western nations will be. These nations will send the pride of their strength to Jerusalem, the carcase for which the eagles will gather, or, to change the figure, the target against which the dreadful arrows of the world will be directed. These are the armed hosts the Lord will gather against Jerusalem. They think only of their own lust, He of his own design. Significantly, therefore, He lays the whole plot. It will be for Israel's final cleansing, and full and final salvation, and for the long-predicted and plenary judgment of the nations who have for ages despoiled, uprooted, or oppressed Israel. It is all plain as if it were history.

In Micah iv. 12, we read, the Lord shall "gather them as sheaves into the floor," or, as our prophet shows, against Jerusalem, only to be destroyed. Dreadful are the details of this war; for first as to the city, it shall be taken and the houses rifled. Overcome by the terrible onslaught, half the city shall go into captivity. The residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. At the first no result could be more disastrous; but then comes a glorious reversal of the fight. "The Lord shall go forth and fight against those nations." He who had gathered them for this end now deals with them single-handed, a solitary Man of War, the One concerning whom the prophet had asked, "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah?" and who responds; I have trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with me; for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengence is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come." Note, the blood sprinkled is not his own, as many wrongly imagine, but the blood of his enemies. Isaiah l. 3, tells of his own blood offered for reconciliation. This is blood of destruction. Parallel passages descriptive of this are Rev. xix. 11—13; see also Ps. xiv. 3—5.

With no material weapon of war will be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem. 'Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongues shall consume away in their mouth." Conceive an army thus! Never was war like this. No counting the dead after the fight; horses, mules, and all beasts, with the nations, all reduced to this sudden, inglorious issue. Think of the pride of the world — the vast Eastern and Western powers, the great ones of the earth—"the wealth of all the nations round about gathered together; gold and silver, and apparel in great abundance"—all in a moment a prey to this sudden, unexpected doom.

He must be ill-acquainted, indeed, with history who would make this to mean the war of Titus. Then it was the utter triumph of Rome and the destruction of Jerusalem but here the destruction of the nations and the salvation of Jerusalem. Truly under Titus the streets were made to run down with the blood of the Jewish slain; but here the enemy is destroyed—annihilated. The war under Titus was followed by the Jews dispersion; but this is followed by the Lord's reign, and Israel and Judah made to dwell together again. No, the event, like most in the prophecy, is yet future; and this word regarding it, if men would but read, is a light penetrating the awful times into which Israel and the nations of the world are yet to enter. Again, I say, little do men think of this. They dream only of progress and peace; the settlement of boundaries and the arrangements suited to commerce, and the well-being of man as he is. But their thinking or not makes no difference. The words are closed and sealed up till the time of the end. "The wicked shall do wickedly but the wise shall understand."

One feature more we must not fail to see The Lord is standing on the Mount of Olives as if to survey the scene, when, lo! at his presence, the mountain parts in twain, the long-extending valley which is formed thereby opening to Israel as they flee from the enemy, providing for them a safe asylum answering to what the opening of the Red Sea was when Pharaoh and his legions were pursuing them of old. Sheltered and secure themselves, the enemy is seen to lie multitudinous around in ghastly heaps. A marvellous episode in the world's history is this—

"A wondrous Conqueror there I see,
He bears a banner, sign of victory;
His hand no weapon wields, yet 'neath His hand
Of conquered dead ones lies a countless band."

How still the scene now where Christ is He has dashed the nations as a potter his vessel. "The heathen are given to Him for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." "The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner" (Mark xii. 10). Alas, for the builders! What can we say but, alas for those who have rejected Him, or who have rejected the Gospel!

MANCHESTER.—In connection with the half-yearly meeting of the National Council of the Y.M.C.A., a public meeting was held last week chairman Mr. Herbert Philips. Addresses were delivered on "The relation of the Y.M.C.A. to the Church of Christ," by Mr. Geo. Williams; on "Commercial Life," by Mr. Herbert Tritton; on "Evangelistic Work," by Mr. J. F. Fawckner Newport; on "Extension Work," by Mr. W. Hind Smith; and on "Athletics," by Mr. E. J. Kennedy.

GOSPEL TROPHIES AT GRAY'S YARD.

SINCE I penned the brief notice respecting Gray's Yard that appeared in your columns, the following has been put into my hands as showing the Divine blessing on the work:—"We can tell of many cases of blessing where those who were sunk in the very depths have come to the feet of Jesus. The result is not always seen at the time. Often after the meeting a man comes up and tells how he found the Lord in that room months ago. A sailor, who had heard the Gospel many times at Gray's Yard, but who was utterly careless, was struck by lightning in the Mediterranean, and for a time entirely lost the use of one arm. The words he had heard came to his mind then, and were blessed to him. Two years ago, on returning from this voyage, and while still disabled, he came to tell us at Gray's Yard the good news of his conversion. Afterwards he regained the use of his arm, and went to sea once more. On his return, a week or two ago, he came to the meeting to give a bright testimony, and tell the others something of what Christ had been to him.

"On another occasion a respectably-dressed man, whom we had taken for a visitor, told us that six months before he had come to the 'New Year's Breakfast' almost in rags, and had been awakened by the hymn, 'Weary wanderer, stop and listen,' sung by a lady. He was converted soon afterwards, and at once returned to his home, from which he had run away eight years before, when quite young. He relatives did not know him, but were overjoyed at his return. On coming back to London he obtained a good and responsible situation in a large house of business at the West-end of London. This is only one case out of many in which the word spoken at Gray's Yard has reached the heart of a prodigal son, and led him to return to his home and friends.

"One of these in a letter soon after he had accepted Christ, says, 'I wrote to my dear parents in ——. My poor mother received my letter on Tuesday forenoon, at twelve o'clock, and so great was her rejoicing that she could not wait till two o'clock for my father to come to his dinner, but put her bonnet and shawl on, and went to his work. What a night of prayer and thankegiving there was for the saving of their prodigal son. My hourly prayer is "to keep me steadfast and faithful to the end." . . . I bought a Bible on Wednesday.'

"As the congregation was dispersing after one of the meetings, a man was asked if he were a Christian? 'No, I'm not, worse luck,' was the gruff reply; 'it's no use your talking to me, God has left me long ago and won't have anything more to do with me.' He would not for some time give his reason for this idea, which he repeated persistently; but at last he said, 'There's a verse in the Bible that proves it. "He that hateth his brother is a murderer, and no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him"' (1 John iii. 15). He added, 'That's what I am, lady, I'm a murderer.' This we found was really the case. Some wretch having gone off with his wife, he vowed vengeance, and buying a pistol carried it about with him continually till they met. In the scuffle that followed, he shot the wrong man, and so had been convicted of manslaughter. On his release from prison he still was determined to take the life of his enemy, till at Gray's Yard his heart was touched, and he saw his sin. We tried to show him by many passages that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin, but he could not believe the promises were for him.

"The following Sunday he was again at the meeting, and his face was so changed we scarcely knew him. He told us that he had found pardon and peace, and on our asking if any particular text had helped him, he said, 'Oh yes, it was Isaiah i. 18: "Come now and let us reason together saith the Lord, though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow, though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool," and I've been thinking all the week, it's so wonderful God should want to reason with me.'

"It is now two years since this took place, and still this is his wonder, not only that God was willing to pardon him, but, as he said only a few days ago when referring to it, 'as though He wanted to talk me over to it.' Though he has, during this time, been in great want over and over again, we have never heard him murmur. 'Anything is good enough for me,' is often his response; 'the Lord never lets me be too short, and if it doesn't come one day He makes up for it the next.' He has supported himself in an honest manner ever since, though often he has found it very difficult to earn sufficient.

"Another striking case was that of a man who came in during the Gospel service in the evening, to get shelter from the rain. He was hurrying out immediately at the close, but we detained him, and, after some conversation, found out that he had only been out of prison a few days on ticket of leave. He had been unable to obtain work, and, in desperation, said he intended to put an end to that sort of thing that night. He had planned to meet some friends in half an hour's time and with them to commit a burglary. He said he didn't care if he got twenty years for it. It was with great difficulty that we persuaded him to give it up. At last he seemed touched, and returning to his seat with tears rolling down his cheeks, he said, 'It's awfully good of you to care; I won't go.' It was easy then to speak to him of Christ, and we had good reason to believe, by what we saw of him afterwards, that he really had taken Christ as his Saviour. By subsequent inquiries we were able to prove the genuineness of his story, and he soon obtained permanent work."

The numbers attending the afternoon meetings are continually increasing, and the rooms, which are much overcrowded, often become almost unbearable. A fund has, therefore, been started for procuring new premises, or for enlarging those at present in use, and this fund, with promises received, amounts to over £1000, but, of course, much more would be needed. All London is debtor to a work of this kind, and it cannot be carried on without a large annual expenditure, for besides the food there are several hundred pounds needed for the other branches of the work—the Sunday-school, the Ragged-school (one of the oldest in London), and the New Year's Breakfast for the casuals. In writing to one of the workers on the subject last year, the late Lord Shaftesbury said, "There cannot be a better object than that which you have in view, and had I any means I would help it to the utmost of my power."

SEAMEN'S REST, BOMBAY.

WE have inaugurated a "Seamen's Rest" in this great city on the Arabian Sea. Ever since coming here we have longed to see a special mission opened amongst seamen, thousands of whom visit the port every year. Man-traps abound on all sides. We have secured a room between two of these man-traps. It has been formally dedicated to the Lord, and the work of rescue has begun. The room was crowded at the opening meeting, principally with seamen. Addresses were given by Rev. George Bowen, editor of The Bombay Guardian; Rev. Mr. Bell, of the Baptist Church; and others. That meeting was the beginning of a series which we hope to keep going for years. So far the attendance has been very encouraging.

Last Sunday night one of our workers went into the "Rising Sun," public-house in search of men. He found five sitting around a rum bottle. Among his bottles on a raised platform squatted, like a great spider, the Parsee proprietor. The men were induced to leave the place and go into the meeting. Thus we expect to work. We solicit your sympathy and prayers in this venture for Jesus.

GOSPEL WORK IN BERLIN.

THE evangelist, Rev. F. von Schluembach, has taken up his work again in Berlin. A few years ago, for a short time in the Northern districts (the head-quarters of the social democrats), the results were simply marvellous, and are still felt. One of the worst dancing-saloons was bought and converted into a mission hall. Those who had been blessed through Mr. von Schluembach's efforts here found a place of meeting, and it is a joy to see the work flourishing in all its different branches. There are now in attendance eight hundred Sunday-school children; two hundred mothers gather together for mutual Bible study one afternoon in the week; well attended meetings for men, young men, and young women are also held. A Sunday morning breakfast provided for the homeless has already proved a blessing to many. The general tone of the neighbourhood has greatly improved.

May we not expect the same, and even greater results, among the labouring classes in the East-end where Mr. von Schluembach is now hard at work. The prospects are already very promising, the meetings being crowded to overflowing evening after evening. Evangelistic labour is all the more required here, there being only one church to meet the needs of over a hundred thousand souls. This is unfortunately no solitary exception in Berlin.

Whilst Mr. von Schluembach's evenings are thus devoted to the poor, other classes are not overlooked. In the daytime Bible-meetings are held in the homes of the wealthy, and public Bible-readings in the business part of the city. His presence at the recently established noonday prayer meeting adds greatly to its growth. He also lends a helping hand wherever required to the Y.M.C.A., which he was the means of organising three years ago. Mr. von Schleumbach intends continuing his work in Berlin until the middle of April. Will English Christians unite in praying that his labours may be richly owned by God?

WOMAN'S WORK FOR PURITY.

THE cordial welcome everywhere given to the Women's Union of the Gospel Purity Association is a practical proof of the need that existed for its operation. The committee of the Association had scarcely begun their work when the necessity of securing the widespread co-operation of women was recognised, and promptly acted upon. Last March Mrs. Bradley was appointed organising Secretary of the Women's Union, and since then the work has been spreading from many centres.

A revised pledge which has been adopted is as follows:—

> I promise by the help of God (1) to uphold the law of purity as equally binding upon men and women; (2) to be modest in language, behaviour, and dress; (3) to avoid all conversation, reading, art, and amusements, which may put impure thoughts in my mind; (4) to guard the purity of others, especially of the young; (5) to strive after the special blessing promised to the pure in heart.

A considerable number of ladies are quietly inculcating these principles, in conjunction with such useful literature as Miss Hopkins's "Early Training," &c., Mrs. Dyer's "Perils of Girls" (with its invaluable appendix), Mrs. Bayly's "Old Mother's Letter," and other publications. Many London districts and provincial towns have been visited, and meetings held to explain and enforce the objects of the Union. England's greatest need just now is a pure and resolute womanhood, to cleanse the homes, protect the children, and purify society. All who can lend a hand in this great cause should place themselves in communication with the Secretary, Mrs. Bradley, 43, Grange-park, Ealing, London, W.

RADSTOCK.—Soon after the election riots here, Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, commenced Gospel services in the Ebenezer Chapel. They were continued till the third Sunday with increasing interest, power, and blessing. A threefold blessing has been given—sinners have been saved, backsliders restored, and believers blessed.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

SINCE the close of the Conference reported in your issue of last week, we have been receiving most interesting letters from prominent Christian workers in various parts of the country, telling us of the great spiritual blessing which they received in Manchester, and thanking God for the happy and refreshing time they spent with us. More than one foreign missionary has said that he will return to his distant sphere of labours with new hope and enthusiasm, cherishing the feeling that there are warm and sympathetic hearts beyond the circle of his own denomination who have a loving interest in him, and that prayer is going up to God for him from those the reality of whose faith he has learned to trust in.

This is a direct answer to prayer, and one which makes us truly happy. For weeks before the Conference prayer had been made for those devoted men whom we had invited, that they might instruct us from their experience and fire us with their zeal. We specially asked the Lord that every one of them might carry away even a larger blessing than he left with us. To attain this object we endeavoured to make the Conference as spiritual in its tone as we could by inviting men and women whom we believed to be endued with the power of the Holy Ghost. We set apart the evening previous to the Conference for special prayer, and the influence of those hours was felt all through the following days, for all who were walking in the Spirit felt whenever they entered the meetings that they were on holy ground. The speakers also felt the influence, and their words seemed to flow with that ease and power which only come when the speaker and his audience are in the fullest spiritual sympathy. The most perfect harmony reigned from the first to the last hour, because courtesy and graceful unselfishness distinguished both the audiences and speakers. We who had the management had literally no trouble, and not the slightest anxiety; to us it was an unalloyed pleasure and a true feast.

We think you will not grudge us a little space, that we may bring these matters before your readers, for we are extremely anxious that other cities should hold similar Conferences. The blessing which Manchester has received is but the droppings of the great shower that the Lord will send down upon our land, if Britain will remember the Lord's heathen. We are certain that no place in this land need miss a glorious blessing, if they will do as the Lord has led us to do. We are certain, moreover, that our home heathen will never be effectively reached until we reverse the proportion of interest; at present we give nine parts to the home and one part to the foreign heathen. When Britain gives nine to the foreign and one to the home, that one will be so blessed by the Holy Ghost that its influence will be increased a hundredfold, and the results will be glorious.—Yours in the Gospel,

Reginald Radcliffe,
Leonard K. Shaw,
Gilbert Kirlew,
J. Wakefield MacGill.

WOMAN'S MISSION TO WOMEN.—Sir,—The Female Mission to the Fallen is carried on entirely by Christian women labouring in the streets, hospitals, and other places in this vast Metropolis. We are at the present moment being urged to extend our work, and we are anxious to respond to the appeals that are made to us. At the same time we dare not incur further responsibility in the present state of our funds. Upwards of one thousand young women come under the care of our missionaries annually, and even children often have to be taken into our mission-houses. Few efforts can have stronger claim upon Christian people at this time of the year than this we are making on behalf of our fallen sisters and helpless children, who are being educated to a life of infamy.—Yours faithfully, George Hanbury.

SAVED FROM THE WRECK.

IN the Christmas issue of Night and Day, Dr. Barnardo gives several striking instances of child-rescue recently effected by his Homes. From his Personal Notes, which are this month of great interest, we cull the following extracts, somewhat condensed for want of space:—

"'I give tithes of all that I possess to the devil, and I get drunk twice a week.' Nearly the whole of poor Nelly's relatives might have adopted this sentence as their own. Their ill-flavoured, useless lives were for ever hovering on the verge of criminality and starvation. Nelly's grown-up sister had 'gone wrong.' Her three brothers and herself, as well as this sister, lived with their grandmother in one small room, of course in the utmost squalor, and with neither thought, nor, indeed, possibility, of decency. Unkempt little Nelly came to me when a sudden illness of the grandmother threw the whole family into the workhouse. Despite her upbringing, there was that in Nelly's face which predisposed everybody in her favour; this was a straightforward look of simplicity and modesty that seemed in itself a certificate of character. 'Willing and good,' is the description of her at the Village Home; but there is no doubt that she was just caught at the turn of the tide. Without relatives—or with those who were worse than none—what could be predicted for her when, in a year or two, she would be left by the cold mercy of the workhouse to make her way in the world? Is it not, humanly speaking, probable that her career would have ended in disaster and shame? Now, surrounded by the sweet and gentle influences of home, she will, I pray and believe, grow up into a life worth living.

"Two brothers were admitted to the Home last September, ordinary enough looking lads except for the fact that the younger of the two was the thinnest and meagerest little fellow that had ever come before me. Three years ago their mother had died, and their father, a labourer 'of no regular occupation, unluckily fell into the hands of the Board School officer for not sending the children to school. 'Five shillings or five days' was the result, and, of course, the latter alternative was a foregone conclusion. On coming out of prison he found his home gone, and finally he went to a travelling showman, arranging that he should keep the two boys in his caravan, and do his best with them. Both boys now went on their travels, at first selling hearthstones and small ware, but finally being promoted to part of the 'show' itself. The youngest boy was exhibited as 'the living skeleton,' a part for which cruel usage and semi-starvation eminently qualified him. His elder brother at last ran away on account of the showman's ill-usage; and my little 'skeleton,' encouraged by his brother's example, took advantage of a recent visit of the caravan to London, and also made his escape. Independent communications were made to me by benevolent people on behalf of each of the brothers, and they were ultimately reunited under our roof, I have had traces of the father at intervals within the past month or two, but he has not yet been found.

"'No home in the wide world,' was the succinct story of a woman who, obviously in an advanced stage of consumption, brought her two children to my door this autumn. John, a little fellow of eleven, with pinched face, and clad in the merest shreds of clothing, would be, said his mother, 'a nice boy if he had enough to eat and drink.' But, alas! these prime necessities of their existence had been doled out to him in but scanty measure. The poor woman's tale was a sorrowful, but a not uncommon, one. For three years she had had no home, living in casual wards, low lodging-houses, and those grim mockeries of a home—'furnished' rooms. The weary weight of her precarious struggle for bread had deadened her life to the very narrowest scope. 'I don't know,' she said, 'how the years go;' and I found that she could not even tell, though she could at least read and write, what year of grace she was living in. Her husband, a labourer, had died in St. Thomas's Hospital from chest disease, but six months before his death, his wife had had to leave him on account of his cruelty, the effect of which, alas! her poor battered face still bore sad tokens. Of course drink was at the bottom of it all. These little mites of children were aged respectively eight and four when they were, with their mother, thus cast adrift on the stormy streets of London. Need I say that our doors at once opened wide for the bairns? Little Mary is now at Ilford, and her cheeks are beginning to assume a faint tinge of colour. John, with the blessed elasticity of boyhood, is in our Stepney Home, quickly regaining his lost youth, and now looks at least a couple of years nearer his real age than he did when admitted.

"Just as I go to press a pathetic appeal comes from one of the London prisons. The chaplain writes:—'Have you a home for babies? and if so, can you admit an infant a week old? Its mother was imprisoned here for theft, and while undergoing her sentence died in giving birth to this unfortunate little one.' There were no friends or relatives who could undertake the care of this poor waif floating haplessly upon the sea of life; and I was glad to be able to offer it a home in our Babies' Castle, Hawkhurst, and a mother in the person of the kind matron who presides over it."

These illustrations of Dr. Barnardo's work should come to us all this Christmastide as reminders of the blessedness of caring for the poor waifs and strays of our streets who are so dear to the Saviour of men. Dr. Barnardo's postal address is 18, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

TRACTS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Sir,—In a recent number of The Christian I observe an extract from Mrs. Gordon's memoir of her late husband, in which it is stated that a suggestion made by Mr. Gordon as to the provision of cheap popular tracts, to form an antidote to the infidel ones that are so freely distributed among certain classes, remains still to be carried out. The extract goes on to say: "The Religious Tract Society are at present issuing, it is true, a series of tracts on the subject, but they aim at a higher class, and are not within the grasp of the multitude."

You will be glad to learn that we have not overlooked the multitudes in our efforts to counteract the infidel propaganda which is being so actively carried forward. I send you a number of cheap tracts intended for circulation among the working classes, more especially the Secularists. The "Aleck Martin" ones have been largely used by the Christian Evidence Society, especially the one on the Resurrection. The tract, "Some Testimonies to Jesus Christ," has been widely used, and found most effective "The Man of Marble" records an actual discussion, in which Mr. Arthur (author of "The Tongue of Fire") took part.

It may, perhaps, be thought that a tract on Hume's argument against miracles is hardly needed by the classes for whom the cheap tracts are issued, that they are not likely to read Hume. When, however, I tell you that I have a copy of "Hume on Miracles," issued by the Freethought Press, for which I paid threepence, and that I have seen a penny edition advertised, you will see that there is need for it. We have other tracts of a similar kind in preparation which will appear from time to time.

It would be a mistake to suppose that the "Present Day Tracts" are not read by any of the working classes. These are, to a certain extent, all the Secularist papers. The National Reformer, The Secular Review, and The Freethinker, have had several articles upon them; in some instances, several articles on a single tract. Trusting that, in justice to the efforts which the Religious Tract Society has been making for some years past to meet both the higher and lower forms of unbelief, and for the purpose of giving information to your readers which may prove useful to them, you will give a place in your columns to this letter, I remain, faithfully yours,

John Kelly,
Editor of the Present Day Series, Christian Evidence Tracts, &c. &c.

CHISWICK.—On Saturday week the memorial stone of the new Ragged School at Chiswick, in connection with the work of Mr. R. T. Smith, was laid by Mrs. Watts.

THE CHURCH ARMY TRAINING HOME.

FOLLOWING in the wake of its predecessor, the Salvation Army, the friends who conduct the Church Army have instituted a Home for the practical training of working-men evangelists. Its premises are at 174, Edgeware-road, where a hearty dedication service was held on the afternoon of Monday week. Among those who took part in the proceedings and commended the work of the army were Canon Barker (chairman), Rev. W. Carlile, Rev. F. S. Webster (Principal of the Home), Rev. A. M. W. Christopher, Oxford, Rev. E. W. Moore, Mr. Clifford, and others. Over £100 was either given or promised towards the expenses of the Home.

The speech that excited the greatest interest, says The Record, was that by Mr. W. S. Heathcote, who has just finished his Oxford course; he is to be ordained next week, and will begin work under Rev. Evan Hopkins at Richmond. He declared that there were numbers of young been both at Oxford and Cambridge who were longing to do something to reach the vast masses of people who were perishing for want of knowledge of the Gospel. Till the Church Army sprung up there was no opening for their zeal, and many had contemplated joining the Salvation Army for that purpose. "Go down amongst the people," Mr. Heathcote said; "never mind your respectability; show them that you love them as the Master did, and then you must win them." This "earnest manly speech," as Canon Barker termed it, made a great impression on the meeting. "It must have touched all our hearts," the chairman said. Every information concerning the work of the Church Army can be obtained at the headquarters, 36, Southampton-street, Strand.

DINNERS TO BOARD SCHOOL CHILDREN

SIR,—This movement has been in steady and increasing operation during the past three years, having for its object to provide one good meal, either daily or two or three times a week, for the poorest children in some of the London Board Schools. These dinners are restricted to the children of widows, and of parents ill or out of work. During the past year 37,900 dinners have been given at seven halls in poor districts. Opportunity now offers to open two additional halls at the East-end. No one visiting a large Board School, in a poor neighbourhood, can fail to notice many a pale, patient, wan little face lifted from the school benches. The teachers tell many sad stories of poverty and suffering.

These dinner tables are so many witnesses, in neighbourhoods where poverty and wretchedness abound, that the relatively wealthy are not callous and indifferent to the sufferings of the destitute. The children become the concern of the helpers, all of whom are voluntary. No child who has been received at our tables, leaves school without their knowledge, and often the little help needed for entering service is given. To quote from the report of our third year's work, a young girl is saved from idleness, "just at that most dangerous time of a young girl's life—the time when she breaks with all school restraints, and is thrown back upon a squalid, comfortless home in a low, depraved neighbourhood."

Should any of your readers be interested in hearing further of this work, reports will be gladly forwarded on application. Subscriptions will be thankfully received by the treasurer, Mr. H. E. Allen, 44, Marlborough-hill, St. John's-wood, N.W.—Yours obediently,

ANNA PENNINGTON, Hon. Sec.

CAMBRIDGE.—The Advent Mission in St. Matthew's parish is prospering. About 400 attend the after-meeting in the school from the church. Rev. Walter Bradbury is the missioner, assisted by several clergy, and the Church Army, which is very efficient and fruitful. About seventy undergraduates take a special interest in this large and poor parish.

REVIVAL IN NOVA SCOTIA.

THROUGHOUT the district of Miramichi (New Brunswick) there has been during the past months a remarkable spiritual awakening. The tent meetings of the evangelists, Messrs. Meikle and Gerrior, at Newcastle, Chatham, and Douglastown, have been attended with great results, though in several quarters a growing interest and special activity prevailed before, and, indeed, led the way to their coming. Some deeply-interesting accounts of a work of spiritual revival in this North-American province have appeared in The Presbyterian Witness, from the pen of a trustworthy observer, Rev. John McCarter, of Redbank, Nova Scotia. We extract the following: "Mr. Gerrior seems happily to combine the gifts of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. We believe to many this visit will prove an eternal benefit."

As a result of the meetings, nearly 60 persons have made public profession of faith in Christ. However this might appear in a city congregation, it will be allowed to be uncommon in a country charge scattered up and down the two banks of a river for a length of sixteen miles. The ages of the new communicants vary from 15 to 63. Simultaneously there has also been an arousing of the older members. For several weeks there has been, nearly every night of the week, a meeting at some spot along the river, in church, school-house, or hall, the people taking part in increasing numbers. Members of all the evangelical churches have joined with great harmony. Some, too, of the Roman Catholics quietly come in to hear, which they would not do at the ordinary Church services.

REVIVAL IN SOUTH INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—We have been much in prayer for the past six months that a manifestation of power from on high might come upon the natives here and upon us, and that souls might be saved; it really seems as if the Lord was about to work mightily. We have lately started classes for young men, English and Tamil. We have an average of from ten to fifteen in each class every Sunday morning. It is deeply interesting and encouraging to see how eager they seem for the Word, quite drinking it in, each member bringing a number of texts most carefully learnt. Some have begged to be taught in the afternoons. So now every Sunday afternoon a lady has some half-dozen to her house. The eager, solemn way in which they listen to every word, gives us great cause for praise and thankfulness. One who had been given a Tamil Bible thanked me very much, and said, since reading it, the word had begun to work in his heart. He is a writer on a coffee plantation, and now daily reads a few verses to the coolies as they assemble for roll-call.

On Sunday afternoons, from 12 to 2, quite a number of us go out to preach in a large market held for the natives. Tamil lyrics are sung and short addresses given. We also exhibit some coloured pictures on Scripture subjects, on which we speak to the crowds that collect around us. Last Sunday we had an especially solemn time; the natives listened in rapt attention, as we spoke upon the follies of idolatry, and the happiness and joy of having Christ as their Saviour. One who spoke was an old grey-haired, high caste man, converted at the age of thirty-three. He had been through it all, and so was able to give a most powerful testimony. Conviction seemed written on many faces, and eternity only will reveal the results. On Sunday evenings we have a sort of praise and experience meeting. I close with an earnest request for prayer that God would abundantly bless his work in this far-off land.—Yours in Christ Jesus, W. H. S.

FRANCE.—Pastor H. Mouron, 76, Rue d'Assas, Paris, Secretary of the Evangelical Society of France, reports considerable progress in the Gospel work of the society, carried on in various departments. There are calls for more extended effort, but the resources of the society do not permit their being responded to.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

THE Dublin Mail contains a long and interesting report of the recent effort of the Belfast Auxiliary to strengthen the hands of the Secretary, Captain White. The Archbishop of Dublin and Rev. Dr. Neligan addressed large congregations, and presented the claims of the Society. The Archbishop preached in St. Anne's Church. In appealing on behalf of the Society, he said: It is sending forth true and godly men with the Word of God in their hands. Their one object is to make known to the people of this land the living Gospel by means of his living Word.

The public meeting of the Society was held on the following day. The Bishop of Down presided, and spoke heartily of the assistance given by the Society in a town like Belfast, in which the Scripture Reader was often the pioneer. The Archbishop of Dublin and Dr. Neligan urged that the Society should be cordially supported, as it was one of the most powerful agencies they had for spreading the Gospel over Ireland.

REV. W. ARTHUR on AGNOSTICISM.*

AFTER treating of "Positivism and Mr. Frederic Harrison," Mr. Arthur in a second instalment, which is much more extended, deals with "Agnosticism and Mr. Herbert Spencer." The series will be completed by a volume on "Deism and Sir Fitzjames Stephen," and will form a most important contribution to philosophical literature. Mr. Spencer's system has been attractive to a large class of minds. It is presented in a style of great beauty, is marked by vast scientific learning, and meets the sceptical aptitudes of the age. Professing to deliver completely from the necessity of believing or being ruled by ideas beyond man's apprehension, it has undoubtedly attained considerable popularity. It would, if successful, land men in the terrible negations of a universe without an intelligent ruler, and society without moral obligations. It was, therefore, in every way fitting that a Christian man should devote the maturity of his powers to the setting forth of the baselessness of this Godless philosophy. Candid persons will, after reading Mr. Arthur's work, acknowledge that Mr. Spencer is in the hands of a master.

The book is at once unimpassioned and intensely forceful; it is in style learned, and in wealth of illustration popular; it is fair to the system which is reviewed, but relentlessly logical, and abounds in arguments and passages which the students of this new philosophy would do well to lay to heart. Admirable is the conclusion to which the reader is led, that man's knowledge may be real although not omniscient, and that Mr. Spencer's criterion of knowledge cannot be sustained, nor meet the universal sense of mankind.

* RELIGION WITHOUT GOD AND GOD WITHOUT RELIGION. By WILLIAM ARTHUR. Bemrose & Sons.

McAULEY MISSION, NEW YORK.—In the report of this mission in Water-street, New York, superintended by Mr. J. F. Shorey, we are glad to read that the work of the mission during the past year has been blessed of God in the salvation of many souls. All classes and conditions of men find their way into this and other missions of the city. Some of them have occupied good positions of wealth and education whom poverty and degradation (brought on by that common enemy of mankind, strong drink) has forced into the street, the station-house, or some cheap lodging-house, their only refuge. Many of these accept Christ as a Saviour, and go out witnessing by their lives to the power of the Gospel. The past year has been more embarrassing to missions than usual, from the great scarcity of work for the redeemed men. The attendance at the mission for the past year has been 28,295. The average number of requests for prayers has been twelve per meeting; many of the senders are earnest seekers for salvation, while others come for help of all kinds, and yet some of the most indifferent get caught in the Gospel net.

A LETTER FROM MR. STANLEY SMITH.

WRITING on September 18, from Ping-Yang-Pi, Shan-si, North China, to one of his fellow-workers in England, Mr. Stanley Smith says :—

Here I am all alone (and yet not alone) for two weeks or so. Mr. Beauchamp and Mr. Cassels have gone to a new station opened at Sih-chau, about seventy miles north; Mr. Hoste has been at a place forty miles south, with Mr. Key, for the last six weeks or more. I have been with him three weeks on a visit, and am now back here again, surrounded by the dear Chinese. You would love this people. They have backbone and a heart. Of course it is capital for learning the language. Mr. Studd and the two Polhill Turners are en route here. I should not wonder if we settle down in this province, as there are great openings. But some of us have eyes on Ho-nan, that poor province without a settled station (one, I believe, has just been opened) and 15,000,000 souls. Oh, these perishing millions!

I do so rejoice that God gave Mr. Radcliffe to reiterate the message that America, and England, and Scotland are asleep about the heathen. How dreadful if, as with the Apostles in Gethsemane, who might have had the privilege of watching with Jesus one hour, the Master, who has so often asked the Church "Why sleep ye?" should mournfully have to say, "Sleep on now; behold, I am betrayed." Praise God, the natives are being raised up. We have a well-to-do farmer and two scholars giving all their time and energies to the spreading of the Gospel—Messrs. Fau, Hsi, and Chü. In Shan-tung, the Baptists have around one city fifty-five churches, all self-supporting, last year baptizing 360 converts.

I hear the Gospel is getting into the Palace. Princess Kung has thrown away her idols, and, in company with fifteen others, worships God through Jesus. One outcome of the Peking meeting we held is that the missionaries there, to the number of twenty to thirty, including their wives, have signed a circular, which they are sending to all the missionaries in China, asking them to unite daily in praying for an outpouring of the Spirit on themselves and China.

While I was at Chin-wa, there was a great gathering in honour of the "T'sai-Shen," the "Wealth-God." Every shop in China pretty well has an altar to him. All the main street was done up with bunting, &c. We managed to sell 600 to 700 Gospels and books in the two days. Just before I left two men determined to come to (li-pai) worship. Mr. Hoste and Mr. Key have only been there about six weeks, so the work is beginning. "Who shall let it?" This is a place for fierce conflicts—a good school for getting to know Him.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

ON Sunday, December 13, in the Scotch Church, San Remo, Italy, Mr. C. Faithful, Director of the Mission to Foreign Seamen at Marseilles, gave an interesting account of Gospel work in Spain, in which he has been engaged for eleven years. In 1868 only one per cent. of the population could read, now schools existed everywhere; in that year there was no liberty for the circulation of the Bible or for preaching, now there is complete freedom; then only in two towns (Malaga and Seville) were Protestant services held, and that secretly, now in every large town they are conducted with the utmost publicity.

Mr. Faithful mentioned, as interesting features of the work in Madrid, the number of children who sought and found Christ, and also the liberality shown by the poor in supporting services. Rev. Alex. Robertson, who presided, seeing the interest manifested, proposed that a collection should be made on behalf of the work, and the proposal met a hearty response.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS, who has been holding special meetings during the past month in Dublin, with much blessing to saved and unsaved, is now preaching nightly in Glasgow.

LATYMER-ROAD MISSION.

IN an outlying, poor, West-end district there has stood for nearly a quarter of a century an unpretentious building known as the Latymer-road Mission Rooms. In 1883 the premises were extended by the addition of a good-sized hall and three classrooms; this extension was found absolutely necessary for the requirements of the work, which has year by year steadily increased until it has assumed very considerable proportions. There are large Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, children's services, and adult meetings, the latter being conducted by a London City missionary.

A very important branch of the work is the Infant Day Nursery, where, every day of the week (excepting Sunday), a number of babies are cared for during the occupation of the mother at the wash-tub; for in the Latymer-road district there are a great number of laundries, and a large section of the female population find employment in this industry.

The evening shelters for boys and girls are popular resorts for the urchins of the neighbourhood—ragged and otherwise—who find in them not only a refuge from the streets, but various attractions in the shape of games, books, &c. There is also a Youths' Institute, which provides for the elder lads and young men, a reading-room, drum and fife band, and gymnasium; the last named is opened five times a week, and used by the small boys as well.

Another invaluable agency is the Gospel Temperance Society. Encouraging results not infrequently attend the efforts put forth, many having been led to give up the drink and to pursue not only a sober but a Christian life.

Besides the operations described above, we may mention the Band of Hope, night-schools, workmen's club, farthing bank, Wednesday evening lectures and entertainments, and cocoa concerts on alternate Saturdays. Visitors are always welcome. Communications should be addressed to Mr. Aulay Macaulay, Hon. Secretary, Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting-hill.

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.

WE have many mercies to record during the year 1885; all pressing needs have been supplied, and our inmates numbering 117 have had wonderfully good health. Though a few have passed from our care to the other side of the river, they had all attained a great age. Of some we can truly say, they have gone home like shocks of corn fully ripe; of all that their last hours have been soothed by kindly care, and that they have heard the message of the loving Saviour bidding them come to Him and rest.

Last year, by the generosity of many friends, coals were liberally supplied to all our inmates, and never diamonds sparkled more brightly than did the eyes of the recipients when these treasures of the earth were apportioned to them. Winter has come again, and unless the store is replenished and other needed comforts given to supplement the scanty means of our old friends, increased suffering must be their portion. Visitors are welcomed at any of the Homes, which are at 7, 9, 11, 15 and 17, Minford-gardens, West Kensington; 65, Walterton-road, St. Peter's-park; and 25 and 27, St. George's-road, Notting-hill. A report, with detailed account of this interesting charity may be had on application.

Y.W.C.A., GLOUCESTER.—A branch of the Association has been opened in this city. We started with eighty members in October; since then other sixty have joined us. God has greatly blessed our Bible-classes and weekly prayer meetings. Our expenses have been very heavy for furnishing, &c. We have two quarters' rent owing, besides a debt of £30. As fresh members continue to join us we long to go forward and increase the work. We also want a few good books for our library. The "rooms" are in St. Nicholas parish, where Rev. J. J. Luce ministers, who is also our kind friend and helper. Any help sent to him or the lady superintendent, Victoria-chambers, Westgate-street, Gloucester, will be gratefully acknowledged.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN.

THE greater number of blind children are found among the very poor. The following cases, lately received into the Home at Hackney, represent the kind of applications we are constantly receiving:—Little Georgie, four years old, was born in the Union at ——. He is the eldest of three children, and his father, mother, and children, all in the workhouse. Minnie G—— is the child of a poor widow, a tailoress, earning only 8s. per week. She has another daughter lame. Minnie has only recently become blind from small-pox. Mary A—— has parents who spend all their money at the public-house, and when at home often fight and use bad language. These people promised to pay 2s. 6d. a week for their child, but have not done so. They tell us to send the child home, but how can we send her to such a home?

Destitute children are admitted free; a small charge is made for those whose friends can pay for them. Any Christian lady or gentleman wishing to support a blind child in the "Home" can do so for 5s. per week. Children are received from two years of age, and educated by books in raised letters. The elder boys re-seat chairs and make rugs; the girls knit stockings and all kinds of useful articles, they are also learning to sew. Music and singing are a great source of pleasure to them; some are gifted in that way. Visitors are cordially welcomed any afternoon except Saturdays. The sympathy of the readers of The Christian is earnestly desired.

MR. QUARRIER'S ORPHAN HOMES.

A REPORT of last year's work in connection with the Orphan Homes of Scotland is published by Mr. William Quarrier, and may be obtained from him at 318, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow. During the year the sum of £12,826 was contributed, besides large quantities of clothing and provision. During the same period 646 children were admitted to the Homes, which, with the 483 under care at the beginning of the year, gives a total of over eleven hundred dealt with by the institution.

The report is chiefly in diary form, telling how the daily needs are met. The largest band of children ever sent to Canada by Mr. Quarrier was sent during the past year, bringing up the number who have emigrated in connection with the work during fourteen years to two thousand. The varied branches of the work—the Working Boys' Home, Young Women's Temporary Home and the Children's Night Refuge—are all well sustained and greatly valued. Many friendless and homeless wanderers have been provided with a night's shelter in the lodging-houses, while sick ones have been placed in infirmaries.

It is pleasing to learn that the past year has been more productive of spiritual good than any former year. During the special Gospel services many professed faith in Christ; these in turn have been blessed to the saving of their companions and friends. Many also among the children have been converted. For building new stores and superintendent's house at Bridge o Weir, about £3000 is needed at once.

IN a recent letter Mons. T. P. Sinel writes:— There is a good work going on at Cherbour under the direction of Mons. Le Rendu, who need the sympathy of the Lord's servants; his addres is 11, Rue Thomas-Henry.

Our brother Darling is also working there, chiefl among Swedes, Norwegians, and English sailor also helping in the French work. His address i Rue Val-de Saire, Cherbourg.

I came to Deauville about two months ago at th desire of Colonel Paschkoff, for a week's specia services, but, seeing that the people came to th meetings and that there was blessing, I have continued here, and feel constrained to carry on th work in the name of the Lord. We have severa converts who hold on well, notwithstanding persecution and trial.

WORKERS at the HOME OF INDUSTRY.

THE meeting on Wednesday evening last week showed once more what a wonderful focus of missionary interest is this upper room in noisy, busy Spitalfields. Those who were not present during the tea hour missed one of the best parts of the programme. The rapidly-growing family of "rescues" was there, looking mostly as fair and as neat as if they had been born and reared in West-end drawing-rooms, instead of East-end slums. The boys marched round the room, displaying trophies of the Canadian soil, proving to ocular demonstration that it is a land of plenty. The wee mites of maidens, without waiting for permission, concluded, with one consent, that they, too, must needs swell the interesting procession, and display their bran new dolls. Anon, they sang their sweetest to the baton of Miss Granger, and even sat through Dr. McKilliam's long address with the most exemplary attention and patience. We hope there are many warm hearts and cosy nests throughout Ontario preparing to receive these winsome lads and lasses in the coming spring.

The chief speaker of the evening, as we have said, was Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath, who gave a stimulating and refreshing exposition of the "four living beings," mentioned in Rev. iv. 6, whom he regarded as types of what the glorified Church is by and by to be. The address was comprehensive, we might say discursive, and it would be impossible within our limits to give the many points embraced in it. Identifying the "living beings" with the cherubim of the ancient temple that were beaten out of the same pure gold as composed the mercy seat, and connecting that with their being described in Revelation as "in the midst and round about the throne," Dr. McKilliam dwelt on the nearness of the redeemed to Jesus Christ the Redeemer. Their fourfold aspect is intended to teach that while there will be perfection and completeness—the courage of the lion, the patient endurance of the ox, the soaring contemplation of the eagle, and the intelligence of the man—there will yet be in the service of the glorified Church as great diversity as we find in the redeemed Church on the earth. The "eyes before and behind" denote the capacity to search into the deep things of God. "They rest not day nor night"—they shall know what it is to enjoy rest in the midst of unceasing service. The holiness, omnipotence, and the self-existent nature of God will be the endless theme of their praise. In these last days the Church is being aroused to a greater desire for holiness of life here, because by and by she is going to be the very expression of the holiness of God.

Miss Macpherson introduced Mr. F. Auvache, who has for some time acted as visitor among the children placed out in Canadian homes. He has been accepted by the Canadian Baptist Missionary Society as a missionary on their behalf in India; he goes forth in a week or two to enter on that distant field of service, with his wife—a worker with Mrs. Birt in Liverpool, to whom he has recently been united in marriage.

Mr. Auvache told very feelingly and in some detail, how he had gone out with one of Miss Macpherson's parties some fifteen years ago, to engage in farming work; how he had given his heart to God at the Hampton Home; how in Canada the claims of missions were pressed on him, and he was enabled by and by to return to England and spend two years in Mr. Spurgeon's college; how since then he had taken part in Miss Macpherson's work both in London and Canada, and now the desire of his heart had been granted by his acceptance as a foreign missionary. He asked for prayer that he might be filled with all the fulness of God for the work that was before him.

The few remaining minutes of the meeting were taken up by some words from Mr. Andrew M. Milne, who has for the past twenty years been labouring in South America, chiefly in the Argentine Republic, as an agent of the American Bible Society. A singularly devoted and successful worker he has been. Besides carrying on the work of Scripture distribution and evangelisation in that Republic, he has several times crossed the entire Continent, and traversed the Republic of Bolivia, scattering the Word of God everywhere; meeting with many difficulties, but by the goodness of God and his own indomitable courage, surmounting them all. He is now, with a devoted fellow-worker—a Spanish speaking Italian—en route for the North-western republics of the South American Continent—Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, and Peru, where he hopes to engage in a pioneer work of Bible distribution in these almost unknown and hitherto unevangelised regions. The mission, which is expected to occupy nine months, may probably be a hazardous one; but these two friends, having had much experience in the past of the preserving care and the overruling guidance of God in connection with their work, go forth with the assured confidence that He will again make the way plain before them, and give them good success. We earnestly commend them, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Auvache, to the continued supplications of our readers.

MR. HAMMOND IN THE EAST END.

THE term of three weeks which it was originally designed Mr. Hammond's mission at the "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, should occupy, came to an end on Friday week; but arrangements were made for continuing these services for another week, specially among the boys and girls of Dr. Barnardo's various Homes. The results of the third week were more striking perhaps than any seen before. A great work was done outside the Castle services at Dr. Barnardo's London and Ilford Institutions.

The testimonies given at the workers' meetings, have been eloquent as to the reality and depth of the impressions produced. Many interesting cases came to light at the after meetings. Five members of the Union Jack Brigade professed to be converted one evening. At the same meeting a youth who "had never heard about Jesus, and didn't care whether he went to heaven or hell," was brought under conviction, and finally gave his heart to Christ. Since then he has worked succesfully amongst the younger boys at the services. Another lad who could not read, and had never been to a Sunday-school in his life, was broken down under the power of the word, and gave a bright testimony to the reality of the change experienced in his heart. He has now left for the training ship Goliath.

Numerous letters from children influenced during the mission, continue to reach Mr. Hammond's hands, and most of them speak with all the fervour and enthusiasm of genuine converts.

On Thursday and Friday, Dec. 10 and 11, Mr. Hammond visited the Village Home for Girls at Ilford, where some 600 inmates are in residence. An afternoon meeting took place on each occasion in the schoolroom, which was filled with the girls. Their healthy and happy appearance was in striking contrast to the scenes of destitution from which most of them had come. A number of deaconesses and other workers accompanied Mr. Hammond. At the first meeting many cases of conviction and apparent conversion resulted. Next day, a still more striking result was produced by the service. "I never saw so impressive a spectacle," said one of the workers. Over 200 of the girls professed to have given their hearts to Jesus, and many of these exhibit in every way the marks of a genuine change of heart.

At one of the after meetings at the Edinburgh Castle, the superintendent of the Youths' Labour House stated that, as a result of the services among the lads of the institution, he believed 20 had definitely decided for Christ. Much good has been likewise accomplished among the boys at Stepney Causeway, and Leopold House.

At one of the meetings, last week, much interest was created by a gentleman relating the account of his conversion through Mr. Hammond's services at the Metropolitan Tabernacle 17 years ago. The services at the "Edinburgh Castle" were concluded on Sunday last.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THE GAMBLING HELL AT MONTE CARLO, the existence of which has long been a blot upon the civilisation of Europe, is about to be made the subject of diplomatic action on the part of an International Commission. The report of the Commission states that between the years 1877 and 1885 one thousand eight hundred and twenty people—more than the whole population of the "kingdom" of Monaco—have committed suicide consequent upon losses at the gambling tables of Monte Carlo.

DISTRESS IN PARIS.—In one of the largest of the McAll mission rooms, the young men of the Paris Y.M.C.A. arranged for a social gathering of cabmen. For some reason very few responded to the invitation. The young men therefore went out into the highways and byeways, and invited the destitute and homeless poor, of whom there are thousands in the city. The great chamber was soon filled at short notice; the unexpected guests were first fed, and then had the Gospel preached to them. It is desired to continue this movement, and help towards it will be received by the Secretary Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris.

ST. ETIENNE.—DEAR SIR,—Our Medical Mission, added to the mission of Mr. McAll, in this town, has prospered during the last year. The total number of patients for the twelve months is 8030, a considerable figure when the size of St. Etienne is taken into account. From the villages round about the people come, and each new patient, thanks to the generosity of Mrs. Robertson, of Hampstead, receives a copy of the Scriptures, so that by this time nearly 1000 families are provided. The Lord is working amongst us wonderfully, our meetings are well attended, and at our weekly prayer meeting we have each time nearly one hundred assembled—all Roman Catholics formerly.

HASTINGS BURROUGHS, Medical Missionary.

THE CROWN PRINCESS OF DENMARK, who was present at several meetings of the International Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, held in Copenhagen last year, has been pleased to receive a copy of the English volume reporting the proceedings. In the letter of acknowledgment, the Comptroller of the Royal Household says: "Her Royal Highness thanks you for your kindness in sending the volume, and also for the copies in Swedish and Norwegian, of the address of the Rev. Wm. Arthur on 'The Divinity and Atonement of Christ.' Her Royal Highness is still in hearty sympathy with Christian work, and she will surely take great interest in the perusal of these books."

PROGRESS IN SARDINIA.—DEAR SIR,—I lately paid a visit to Alghero, an ancient seaport on the western coast of this island. The people took willingly a great number of Scripture portions, and several asked for the whole Bible. By request I drew up a petition, which forty men signed, praying the committee of one of the Evangelical Churches of Italy to send them an evangelist. Amongst the signatures were those of two intelligent young men, who offer themselves to us as students for the Christian ministry. Not a very long time ago, when the population numbered only 5000, Alghero contained seven monasteries, all occupied by friars; now, with a population of 12,000, those dwellings of the idle and dissolute are altogether abandoned; many of them, as I have seen, roofless and in utter ruin.

BASUTOLAND.—The efforts of the missionaries and chiefs in Basutoland to put down drunkenness seem to be followed by good results. M. Dieterlen, one of the French missionaries, writing on Sept. 29, says, "Lessouto is at the present time in a promising condition, seeing that drunkenness is blamed and fought against by the majority of the chiefs. Mopeli, a younger brother of Moshesh, has been going through the country preaching a thorough crusade against intoxicating drinks. The people are delighted to find it is impossible to procure eau-de-vie. Last Sunday we had large meetings, and the heathen seemed most grateful for the efforts made to save them from the enemy that threatened their destruction. Weak ones will always succumb, but to all appearance the Gospel has one obstacle the less to overcome."—Journal des Missions Evangéliques.

Letters to the Editor.

"IS THERE NOT A CAUSE?"

DEAR SIR,—I have read with much regret in a recent issue a letter from my friend Mr. Linnell which, had I not known something of the working of the Poor Law, and of the habits of the poor themselves, must have left a wrong impression upon my mind. I can join with Mr. Linnell in deep sympathy for such a case as he describes, but am convinced that, if Seth Lillingstone was a hard-working and thrifty man, his case was a very exceptional one. In reading the letter the following thoughts suggested themselves:—

1. What had become of the large family he had brought up respectably, and why did they not keep him out of "the House"? 2. What had become of the friendly society which, as a thrifty man, he must certainly have belonged to? 3. What was his medical club, that very cheap and desirable institution, doing for him? 4. Had he been an abstainer from his youth up? Not long ago a body of relieving officers bore witness to the fact that out of some thousands of applicants for relief only two or three were abstainers.

I believe that never before in their history have the labouring population been so well off as they are at the present time, nor have there been so many opportunities afforded them which are well within the means of the vast majority of them to prepare for a rainy day, and make themselves quite independent of the Poor Law, and therefore the workhouse is not the goal of most of the thrifty poor, as Mr. Linnell's letter would lead us to suppose, nor, indeed, of one in a thousand, but it should be a righteous terror to the improvident. If men will not be thrifty by nature, it is well that there should be some fear to constrain them, as well as opportunities of enabling them, to be so. There are ample charities and open-handed people enough to provide for all who have really come to want by misfortune, and it is well known that where charities abound pauperism is fostered.

The very expectation of "Out Relief" has been partly the cause of careless spending and has hindered the usefulness of the "Dread of the House." Let social reformers and Christian people but help and persuade the poor to lay out their earnings aright, and they will confer a boon upon them which no almsgiving can possibly do, albeit I do not under-estimate the value of alms well given to, or the responsibility we all have towards, the poor, but I would not have them be taught to depend upon charity, when they are able to provide for themselves.

L. SLEMAN GIBBARD.

Sharnbrook House, Bedford.

A "Country Pastor" writes:—Your correspondent speaks of the workhouse as the goal of life for all labourers, but I can, with some confidence, reply that this need not be the case now, however it may have been twenty years ago. There are substantial clubs in all parts of the country, and for about 2s. a month a young man can secure 10s. a week in case of illness, and 5s. a week in old age.

In the village in which I reside, which is not exceptionally prosperous, there are many labourers old and infirm, and most of them live upon their own resources, on their savings, or on club allowances or pensions; the rest, less than one-third of the whole, receive help from the guardians in their own homes, except two "ne'er-do-weels" who are provided for in the House.

The labourer with a large family, being always on the verge of want, is entitled to our sympathy and respect, if, like a brave man, he try to bear his daily burden, and do his duty toward his household; but labourers, like other people, have lessons to learn which their friends should not fail to set before them.

Let me relate a story something like that told by Mr. Linnell. I will leave you to form your own conclusions. There is an old man who has lived and laboured blamelessly for seventy-seven years; he is suffering from cancer; his wife died a few years ago; he has never been in a club, and now has no home. The guardians, until recently, gave him a weekly allowance, but now they offer him only "the House," intending to compel his sons to maintain him. One of these is a small tenant farmer: he would receive his father if the allowance were continued; another is a groom and gardener (a position superior to that of a labourer), but he will give nothing; the third is a labourer, the aggregate wages of whose household (of seven persons) cannot be less than 30s. a week even in winter, and he was surprised that I expected him to do anything for his father, and utterly refused even 6d. a week. The old man is for the present supported by other means.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Linnell desires the nation to legislate on behalf of its poor. Would he wish the already heavy Poor Rate to be doubled, in order that the lowest class of society may be able to count upon being supported in sickness and old age at their own houses, in comparative ease, by money wrung from the pockets of the hard-working artisan and small shopkeeper who possibly started in the race of life under no higher auspices than the man who receives his "parish pay" out of their hard-earned savings.

Of course this would give a premium on pauperism to a palpable extent. The present system does so too much already, even though Mr. Linnell thinks the present limit of out-relief derisively small.

Had there been no Poor Law and no workhouse as "life's goal" for his poor friend to look forward to, would he have been better off, or worse off? Would he not have made greater efforts to save up his money when he was young and strong, if he had known there was no State aid to fall back upon in his old age? We want to de-pauperise the people, and to raise in them a deeper feeling of independence and self-respect.

As to the cruelty of the guardians in giving this man an order for "the House," instead of giving him out-relief, they probably found his disease was such as required proper nursing as well as medical aid—more, in fact, than his aged partner could possibly give him—and therefore the course they took was merciful, and not cruel.

If the wife had chosen to go with him, they would have been allowed a small room all to themselves if they wished it, and she would have been able to watch and tend him. The guardians had the power, also, to store for them their little bits of furniture, so that if, through the best possible nursing and medical attendance, the poor man recovered, this aged couple would have had reason to thank our Poor Law.

THE MANCHESTER CONFERENCE.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to make one or two slight corrections in your report of some remarks of mine at the Conference in Manchester. Referring to the Hebrew New Testament I held in my hand, the reporter says, "They had two other Hebrew translations. They were the work of a fellow-student of his." The two referred to were the work of others, not of Mr. Salkinson, my old fellow-student, who was the translator of the one I held in my hand. I did not intend to say "thousands were ordered for America," but that many copies were ordered for America. I was privileged to induce the Trinitarian Bible Society to print this translation, unequalled for fidelity and beauty. The Society secured the services of Dr. Ginsburg to superintend its putting through the press.

In the last clause of the paragraph it is said: "He had twenty-six men and women in London ready for the work." It ought to have read: "Amongst our twenty-six workers in London we had men and women ready for the work," and who are only waiting till the Lord makes the way clear.—Very faithfully yours,

79, Mildmay-road, N. JOHN WILKINSON.

DEAR SIR,—In the report of my address at the Manchester Conference there are some mistakes which I shall be glad if you will allow me to correct.

I did not say that thousands were converted in one week. The figures that I gave were as follows:—During the first year of our work in India, when it was chiefly among English and Eurasians, we had at one time 700 persons come forward in the course of two months for salvation. At another place we had 500 natives (nominal Christians) in one week, and over 3000 Hindoos in the course of three or four months. This was in Gujarat. In Ceylon we had in one place over 300 natives in about one month; in another, about 350 in the space of a few weeks; and in Moritna, during the four and a half months of my stay, over 450 names were recorded of persons who came forward as anxious seekers.

The account of my visit to the Golden Temple at Amritsar is not quite correct. It is frequently visited by Christians, but I believe that I am quite safe in saying that none have ever been entertained there, fed and hospitably lodged for the night; much less would any be permitted to hold a regular salvation meeting in their sacred garden.

The Mahommedan zenana, which I was allowed to visit, was of course an exceptional, and in fact altogether extraordinary incident, which I quoted as an indirect evidence of the extent to which we had succeeded in reaching the natives.—Yours truly,

F. TUCKER, Salvation Army.

LADIES FOR THE EAST OF LONDON.

DEAR SIR.—Our Deaconess' House, in the East-end of London, is closed for a brief recess, but will re-open on January 2. There are yet vacancies for a few ladies, and I will be glad to hear from, and to communicate with, any who have time and energy to devote to the Lord's service among his poor. To prevent disappointment, I wish to add that candidates should be ladies who have had a liberal education, are strong and robust in health, and between twenty-four and thirty-five years of age. A comfortable residence is provided in the Bow-road, and every possible care is taken to supply the temporal and spiritual necessities of those who, after a period of three months' probation, remain in the work. Candidates must be communicants of some evangelical body, and should, of course, be total abstainers both in principle and practice.

Fuller details will be sent to any lady willing to communicate with me. Letters, marked in the corner of the envelope with the word "Deaconess," should be addressed to, yours faithfully in the Gospel,

THOMAS J. BARNARDO.

A DESIRABLE SCHOOL IN PARIS.

DEAR SIR,—My wife and myself are much interested in Mdlle. Viénot, a Christian lady, whose school has been advertised in THE CHRISTIAN for a long time. My daughter was for a few months under Mdlle Viénot's care, where she made rapid progress, especially in the acquisition of the French language. But it is to the truly evangelical teaching, borne out in her life and walk, that I particularly desire to ask your attention on behalf of God-fearing parents. I have confidence in asserting that Mdlle. Viénot is a truly spiritually minded Christian. She has a true mother's heart, and rules by love. All her pupils are deeply attached to her, and we consider our daughter privileged to possess such a friend. She is not like a French woman in dress, nor does she encourage any display or extravagance. She keeps a very generous table—abundance of really good and dainty food. We are hoping to place our second girl, now in Germany, with her shortly.

Mdlle. Viénot's English governess has been with her eleven years.—Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM BRANSCOMBE.

"A CRYING SHAME."

SIR,—Yes, it is "a crying shame" that any business men should be so heartless and indifferent to the moral well-being and comfort of the young women they employ, as to turn them adrift every Sunday morning, for the whole day, from their establishments, in which their assistants ought, in all conscience, to find a home as well as a place of business. What wonder that many of these young women are induced to resort to scenes of questionable propriety, or, as is frequently the case, to misspend the Lord's Day, by going on Sunday excursions in which associations are formed that result, in many cases, in their ruin for time and eternity. Instances have repeatedly come under my own notice, in connection with evangelistic work among the fallen, in which the first steps on this downward road were taken in the way described.

For the benefit of all such young women, bonâ fide engaged in houses of business in the West, South-west, or North-west of London, I shall be glad if you will intimate that God having blessed us with a happy Christian home, my wife and family will gladly welcome, in the name of the Lord, any young women thus situated, with the hospitality of our house, on any or every Lord's Day, either to dinner or tea, or to both, while they will be free to accompany the family to services for worship and Christian work, or to attend whatever other places they may desire. The only introduction necessary will be a letter from themselves, which may be written, if allowed, on the business paper of the establishment in which they are engaged, enclosing, when able, a reference to some known Christian friend or worker.

CHRISTIANS AND POLITICS.

Sir,—I am tempted to say a word or two in reply to the letters and articles that lately appeared about Christians mingling in the fray of political strife. I might dispose of the matter in one word, upon which I observe Mr. Soltau has a paper in a recent number of The Christian, "The servant of the Lord must not strive" (2 Tim. ii. 24). But I may be pardoned for giving one or two reasons why I have not for many years used my votes, including one for my University.

A preliminary difficulty is the almost insuperable one that I cannot find a man who will represent my opinions. Not that I am particularly crotchety, nor that an ideal representative may not exist who might meet my views as a believer; but the probability of a truly Christian candidate turning up in the constituencies in which I possess votes is remote indeed.

St. Paul, speaking of the wisdom of God in 2 Cor. ii. 8, says: "Which none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." I am persuaded that the spirit of human governments to-day—government by princes, or government by parliaments—is essentially the same as at the time when St. Paul wrote these words. Will any man claim for the enlightened (?) nineteenth century Parliament of England to-day that it possesses, or comprehends, or can appreciate, the "wisdom of God"? It does not, and it cannot. The second part of the above quoted verse continues true of present-day rulers, be they absolute, or constitutional, or republican. In spirit "they crucify afresh the Son of God, and put Him to an open shame" (Heb. vi. 6). Can I then become a partner in earthly rule which so dishonours my Lord and blessed Master? The moment I record a vote I become morally responsible to God for the acts of my representative in the House of Commons; for, be it observed, there are numberless things upon which both sides are agreed. Take, for instance, the granting of supply for the officers and men of the Queen's services on sea and land; there may be here and there an attempt to reduce the amounts of particular votes, but there is substantial unanimity in voting for an army and a navy.

Putting on one side for a moment the question of a standing army and the murderous work it is sent forth to do, are electors aware of this fact, which I heard proclaimed in public meeting this very month—that no movement of a British fleet, and no march of a detachment of a British army abroad, is arranged until the commanders are satisfied that an adequate supply of prostitutes will be found at the destination of the Queen's ships or troops? If that statement can be denied, let proof be given that it is false. But, if it be even partially true, no casuistry, no ingenuity of argument, no wilful blindness of man, will relieve a single elector from complicity before God in such a truly hideous state of things. I cannot escape the payment of taxes which go in part to support and perpetuate these and other iniquities; I "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's" (Matt. xxii. 21); but were I to record a vote for a Member who does not go pledged to oppose the naval and military expenditure of the country, I become a partaker in the bloodshed and in the impurity to which I have alluded. "Be not deceived; evil communications corrupt good manners. Awake to righteousness and sin not" (1 Cor. xv. 33, 34).

Miss Murray in her recent article most unwarrantably drags John Woolman into her service. That remarkable and holy man—one who had "power with God and with men, and prevailed" (Gen. xxxii. 28)—won his way to the consciences of men living in the sin of man-stealing and slave-holding, and brought about a sort of silent revolution among members of the Society of Friends in America and in England, by private and individual dealing with them. The last place in the world John Woolman would have even dreamed of being found was a polling-booth. By all means let Christians read his memoir—it will do them good.

But a word as to the practical aspect of this question. The clergymen and Nonconformist ministers of this country are presumably her best and holiest men, whose example among Christian people may well be expected to exert an important influence, and lead many to follow that example. Suppose for a moment this magnificent spectacle, that all the ministers of religion in the land were resolutely to refuse to take any part in a general election, and make it manifest that these earthly contentions for the mastery were foreign to their calling and to the purpose of their ministry, what a powerful testimony to the coming King and his pure and peaceful reign would not such abstinence afford to the people, who on the one hand often see the Church (so-called) in alliance with what appears to the people to be oppressive and unjust, and on the other, behold God's ministers fretting themselves and others into antagonism or discontent with the powers that be. If any man or woman does not see enormous gain to true Christianity in an abandonment of party conflict by the classes I have referred to, I do not think any argument will prevail with minds so terribly twisted and confused; and if such a course as I have suggested be good for the recognised leaders of Christian thought, it surely must also be good for every believer whose "citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ" (Phil. iii. 20). Less than the Least.

Sir,—"Should Christians vote? What saith the Scriptures?" This point is being eagerly discussed by many. Some say, "Absurd! We have no time to waste on such quibbles." I submit, however, that the habit—a growing one, I trust—of bringing everything to the test of Scripture is too precious a thing to be lightly treated. Whichever side we take, we must be ready to give a Scriptural reason for our opinion, both to ourselves and to others. Our inquiry, therefore, should be patient, kindly, and respectful. Above all, it should be reverent.

I will first examine the proofs advanced against our supposed freedom of political action. They are as follows:—

(1) In the apostolic age there were social and moral evils as great as any that now exist. Yet the Apostles took no political action respecting them.

(2) So, too, our Lord, when told of the murder of John the Baptist, said nothing, but departed into a desert place apart.

(3) Paul teaches that believers are dead to the world by the body of Christ, the Cross having cut the tie between them and it. Risen with Christ, their citizenship in heaven, they belong to another kingdom. Here they are pilgrims only, passing through an alien world, in which they have no portion. "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. . . . The world hateth them." It is our duty, seeing that we have died to the Christless citizenship of earth, to take no active part whatever in the government of our country, either to establish or to guide it by using the political power entrusted to us. We must, of course, submit to the powers that be. We must also pray for them. There our duty ends. The rest we must leave to the world's own citizens.

(4) Lastly, it is said that the New Testament contains no instructions for voters, M.P.'s., or magistrates. Therefore, to act in either of these capacities is to proceed without the Divine sanction, or guidance, or blessing.

Let us see if this position is practical and according to Scripture. We must hold it consistently if we hold it at all. Few do such terrible damage to Christ's cause as those who adopt extreme opinions, which they are too feeble to apply to the whole round of life.

Now the principle involved in this teaching has a tremendous range of application. To be consistent, we must do far more than not vote. We cannot take active part in the Government. Therefore, as Christians, we cannot be Government servants. The Christian policeman, as well as every Christian man engaged in the Civil Service, whether here or in India, must vacate his post. He cannot even receive his pension. Every godly judge and magistrate must retire; yea, even, our beloved Queen must abdicate the throne. If politics are really forbidden, these consequences naturally follow—for these whom I have mentioned are all component parts of the Government; they are all servants of the country.

But even this is not all. What of our great educational establishments (school boards, &c.), our museums, our schools of art, and science, and music? Are they not as much a part of the world as our political institutions? Are not these, then, forbidden to the Christian?

This being so, we shall need very clear and certain Scriptural authority before we commit ourselves to a position so difficult and extreme. I do not think that a careful and candid examination of the passages of Scripture above quoted will pronounce them either sufficient or satisfactory.

First, as to our Lord's example in refraining to protest against Herod's crime. Is it safe to rest a great doctrine on the narrow foundation of a single incident? Remember that no reason is stated for the course He took. We have supplied one of our own, which may be a mistaken one. Our argument professes to rest on the rock of a Scripture fact: in reality it rests on the sand of our explanation of that fact. It does not follow that because our Lord was silent then, that, if He stood in our place, facing the crimes of our day, He would be silent now.

The same holds good in the case of the Apostles. Popular liberty, with its right of public meeting and its franchise, was but little known in the Apostles' world. This fact alone may account for much. Then, too, while Christ and his Apostles gave us a perfect revelation, they did not give us a revelation perfectly developed. They gave us Christ crucified and risen, the centre of truth's great circle. They gave us, too, in their various Christian doctrines the great radii that branch forth from that centre. But they did not fully extend those radii by showing all the duties to which those truths are applicable. For instance, in their times both slavery and gambling were universal. Yet they condemned neither, so far as we know. They contented themselves with teaching truths which the more developed Christian intelligence of later times would recognise as condemnatory of both those practices. I state this to show that the silence of the Apostles in respect of political duties, or their refraining to undertake such, does not prove much any way. While to say, as some do, that we cannot vote with Christ's sanction and blessing, simply because the New Testament says nothing about voters, or M P.'s, or magistrates, is to treat the matter with puerile literalness.

We have seen that if voting is wrong to a Christian, so is Government service of any kind. Policemen, gaolers, magistrates, judges, statesmen, and kings—all must retire into private life if they would be consistent citizens of the heavenly kingdom. Now if this be so, what of the men belonging to this class who were converted by Christ and his followers? We shall surely see that some of them are told to vacate their posts. There was Nicodemus, a magistrate; the Eunuch, a statesman; and courtier; Sergius Paulus, the Proconsul; and the gaoler of Philippi. Yet, not one of these, so far as we know, is told to leave his situation. This could scarcely have happened if the Apostles had banned all politics.

Then there is the extremely significant fact that Nehemiah, Daniel, and others were statesmen of the highest rank in heathen courts. And yet in that most difficult station they pleased God.

It may be asked, what, then, did Paul mean by our being dead to the world, &c.? Here we touch the heart of the question. Actions speak louder than words. How did Paul regard his Roman citizenship? If he was indifferent to its privileges, then we may grant that he meant to teach indifference to the rights and privileges of worldly citizenship when he said, "I am crucified unto the world." But if by his actions he showed that he still valued his political rights, if he availed himself of them, then I am driven to find some other meaning to his words, and so the entire argument, based upon the strict and literal interpretation of his words, topples into confusion. Need I point out how greatly Paul valued his civil rights? He showed this most plainly when (Acts xvi. 35—39) he forced the magistrates of Philippi to come and take him out of prison, and when he appealed unto Cæsar. Plainly Paul was not dead to the world in the sense that he systematically, and on principle, disregarded its politics. His was death of a nobler and truer sort.

Both sides will admit that no Government in existence is spiritual or Christian. Of none can we say that it is a godly Government, having the glory of God as its great good. We admit that, without exception, the powers that be are worldly. "Therefore," says my opponent, "it is a worldly thing to take part in such a Government." "Nay," I reply, "just as the godly servant of a Godless master may so serve as to please God, so I may serve Christ as a servant of the public, though the Government I obey be utterly bad. Daniel and others gave a glorious answer to that question long ago." But what of the command, "Render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's"? Does that mean mere submission only, the paying of taxes, and the offering of prayers? In a free country like ours the Government is founded upon the intelligent interest and co-operation of the citizens quite as much as upon its taxation. As a citizen I owe thought and influence to my country, as well as money; so that if I render to Cæsar nothing but payments and prayer, I do not give him all that is his. Many centuries ago, almost this very question was raised in Corinth. The converts from heathendom asked if their new faith did not snap every natural and social tie with the ungodly world. Paul answered their difficulty, as I think he answers ours, in one far-reaching sentence, "Brethren, let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God" (1 Cor. vii. 24).

 A letter from the Queen's Printers in reply to Mr. Frowde's in our last, has reached us too late for insertion this week.

Notes and Comments.

THINKING that many of our readers would be glad to see a portrait of Dean Howson, of Chester, who has just been removed from our midst, we have postponed that of Mr. Figgis to our next issue.

The New York Independent, of December 10, devotes no less than twenty-five columns to a report of the Episcopal Mission then proceeding in New York, and in which Mr. Aitken took a leading part. We hope in our next issue to furnish some of the most interesting details.

A few days ago a sweet savour of violets came up from our packet of letters. The one containing them was addressed to Rebecca Jarrett. We forwarded them to Mrs. Butler, who writes that there are no means of sending them to her, but the letter will be kept with many others addressed to her. Our readers will be glad to be assured that she is well and happy, and kindly treated.

The following, sent us by a friend, has a close bearing on recent discussions:—Let Evangelical Churchmen put their hearts into their own beautiful Collect, and pray it, not only with their lips, but with their lives:—

> Almighty God, by whose providence Thy servant, John Baptist, was wonderfully born, and sent to prepare the way of Thy Son, our Saviour, by preaching of repentence; make us so to follow his doctrine and holy life, that we may truly repent according to his preaching; and, after his example, constantly speak the truth, boldly rebuke vice, and patiently suffer for the truth's sake, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

In an exceedingly weighty and much-needed article, published in this month's Expositor, Rev. H. C. G. Moule speaks of "that of which Scripture is full to overflowing—not the recognition merely, but the jealous vindication of the sanctity and awful authority of the Holy Law, the Law viewed as no mere sequence of spiritual phenomena, but as the 'categorical imperative' of the eternal King and Judge. Too often, and in many fields of theological thought, this discrepancy with the tone and proportion of Scripture has to be deplored; a tendency to 'dwell upon the beauty of virtue, but less upon its duty'; a large recognition of sin as disease and discord, but a far fainter recognition of it as GUILT, as the thing which the Law inexorably and eternally condemns and sentences to final death." These are weighty words. We earnestly commend them to all.

We cannot forbear making another quotation from the same article:—

> In Christ resides, in its absoluteness, that RIGHTEOUSNESS which means complete satisfactoriness to the Holy LAW of God. It is his as the head of a body; it is his for the limbs of the living organism whose life is in Him. Faith, faith in Him, faith in its simplest idea, unites the man, for all spiritual purposes and relations to Christ. And so faith is the entrance on the possession in Him, of a sublimely legal justification at the same moment as that in which it is the act of entrance into actual "life through his name."

One lesson of Christmas is the regard of heaven for men of toil. It was to shepherds keeping watch over their flocks that the angels bore the tidings of great joy. There are signs from public letters that there are godly clergymen who regard the recent vote of the agricultural labourers as enforcing that lesson. They complain that in public worship the Church has thrust these labourers into obscure corners. But all Churches, Nonconformist as well as Conformist, have done the same thing. There is no evil much greater than that which this social exclusiveness has brought upon the land, and few radical reforms are more needed than one in this direction.

The Secretary of the Royal Hospital for Incurables at Putney has issued another of his beautifully illustrated and graphically written pamphlets, descriptive of the work of the institution. This latest issue is entitled "My Cottage Clients," and gives an account of visits paid to some of the out-patients of the Hospital who are scattered up and down the country. No class of our fellow-mortals deserve more sympathy than "incurables." Any who will procure a copy of this little book from the office, 106, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., and peruse it, cannot fail to have their sympathy greatly quickened.

To the last two numbers of the United Presbyterian Magazine (Elliot, Princes-street, Edinburgh) Rev. A. Sutherland, of Perth, contributes two interesting papers on "Evangelistic Agencies outside the Churches." Having attempted an enumeration of these almost numberless agencies, the writer seeks to explain the fact of so much Christian effort existing apart from the organised Church bodies. The reason he finds in the want of flexibility and adaptation in the churches for urgent yet special work; in the failure to utilise her vast spiritual resources; in the deficiency of the aggressive spirit, and in the lack of unity. On the last point Mr. Sutherland truthfully says:—

> No doubt the great barrier in the way of such benevolent and evangelistic work is the divided state of the Church. Perhaps there is nothing that shows more clearly the great need of union among the churches. There are so many denominations, and so many different congregations of one denomination, every one having its own interests and its own burdens to care for, that outside work is almost impossible. There is far too little feeling of common interest, and far too much rivalry, although all are working towards the same great end. Were there some approach to a kind of true Christian socialism, how great would be the gain!

It is more than forty years since Charles Dickens published "The Chimes: a Goblin Story of some Bells that rang an Old Year out and a New Year in." Dickens was not considered a Revolutionist; yet he wrote quite as strongly and decidedly as Mr. Linnell in his paper entitled "Is there not a Cause?" But lest our readers should not have a copy of "The Chimes" at hand, we will quote for them a few passages to think upon as the bells ring another old year out and another new year in:—

> "You see, my friends," said Alderman Cute, "there's a great deal of nonsense talked about Want—'hard up,' you know; that's the phrase, isn't it? ha! ha! ha!—and I intend to Put it Down. There's a certain amount of cant in vogue about Starvation, and I mean to Put it Down. That's all. Bless you," said the Alderman, turning to his friends, "you may Put Down anything among this sort of people, if you only know the way to set about it!"

> "Ah!" cried Filer, with a groan. "Put that down indeed, Alderman, and you'll do something. Married! Married!! The ignorance of the first principles of Political Economy on the part of these people; their improvidence; their wickedness; is enough to——Now look at that couple, will you?"
> Well, they were worth looking at. And marriage seemed as reasonable and fair a deed as they need have in contemplation.
> "A man may live to be as old as Methuselah," said Mr. Filer, "and may labour all his life for the benefit of such people as these; and may heap up facts on figures, facts on figures, facts on figures, mountains high and dry; and he can no more hope to persuade 'em that they have no right or business to be married, than he can hope to persuade 'em that they have no earthly right or business to be born. And that we know they haven't. We reduced it to a mathematical certainty long ago." . . .

> "My lady," returned Sir Joseph, with solemnity, "none the less am I the Poor Man's Friend and Father. Not the less shall he receive encouragement at my hands. Every New-Year's-Day, myself and friends will drink his health. Once every year, myself and friends will address him with the deepest feeling. Once in his life, he may even perhaps receive; in public; in the presence of the gentry; a Trifle from a Friend. And when, upheld no more by these stimulants, and the Dignity of Labour, he sinks into his comfortable grave, then, my lady, I will be a Friend and Father—on the same terms—to his children."
> Toby was greatly moved.
> "Oh, you have a thankful family, Sir Joseph!" cried his wife.
> "My lady," said Sir Joseph, quite majestically, "Ingratitude is known to be the sin of that class. I expect no other return."
> "Ah! Born bad!" thought Toby. "Nothing melts us!"
> Still the Bells, pealing forth their changes, made the very air spin. "Put 'em Down! Put 'em Down! Good Old Times! Good Old Times! Facts and Figures! Facts and Figures! Put 'em Down! Put 'em Down!" He dreaded to hear them tagging, "Friends & Fathers! Friends & Fathers!" to the burden they had rung out last.

Thank God, the Bitter Cry of Outcast London and other cities has been heard, and things are better, as well as worse, than they were forty years ago. But Alderman Cute, and Mr. Filer, and Sir Joseph Bowley, and others of their kith and kin, are not all dead. Neither is the condition of Will Fern, or Toby, or Margaret, or Lilian, a matter of ancient history. They are among us still; and Jesus says, "Inasmuch as ye have shown kindness to one of these, ye have done it unto Me."

Steps are being taken at Rome to canonise two hundred and seventy-seven servants of God (so-called) who "lived holy lives, or died heroically in England in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Among their number are 149 secular priests, 18 Jesuits, 7 Benedictines, 12 Franciscans, and the rest laymen." These men were either alien priests or traitorous Englishmen, who strove to bring England under the yoke of foreign powers, whose names, whether they are canonised or not, will be handed down to the detestation of future generations, wherever the English language is spoken. It would have been kinder to allow the grass to grow quietly on their graves, than to reveal their names to the scorn of the great Anglo-Saxon races in England, North America, and the Colonies, who had permitted the waters of oblivion to wash out their memories.

The Emperor of Germany has declined to allow the French Roman Catholic missionaries to settle in the newly-annexed district in West Africa known as the Cameroons. This order gives rise to serious reflection. No English Government would under any conceivable circumstance pass such an order. The Jesuits are not welcome guests in England, but ungrudging hospitality is offered to every nation and tribe in the world that abides by the law. The German government give two reasons: (1st) that the Jesuits to which order the applicants belong, are not allowed in Germany, and, by parity of reason, cannot be allowed in the Colonies. (2nd) that wherever the French missionary is allowed to enter, he is an intriguer, a disguised agent of the French Government, one who has always France and not Christ on his brain, and would not scruple to do his best to weaken any government for the advance of French interests. We fear that such is the case; the whole history of French Roman Catholic Missions reveals the same features. Whether in Tonquin, or Madagascar, or Polynesia, or Africa, the same black feet are seen peeping out from under the skirts of the French priest's soutaine.

We continue to receive letters on the merits of the Stead prosecution, pro and con. The matter, so far as it relates to the past, has been sufficiently discussed in our columns, and we cannot give further space to it.

In order to meet the convenience of those readers who do not get their copies of the paper till some days after publication, we are arranging that the "Notes on Daily Readings" shall run from Sunday to Sunday, instead of Thursday to Thursday. Next week we shall give Notes for ten days.

The following request will find an echo in every Christian heart :—

> Dear Sir,—May I ask the prayers of your readers for a young man who has just been apprehended, and is to be tried for the crime of having spoken of the Lord Jesus as the only Saviour of sinners, in his father's village in the island of St. Maria. Much of the toleration we have hitherto been allowed here may depend on the issue. "Oh if we have to suffer, blessed Lord, may it only be for faithfulness to Thee!" cried one of the converts in prayer last night; and I am sure every heart in the little band said, "Amen." Not long ago that man's Sunday pastime was gambling, and worse! We can only cry to God for the wonders of Acts iv. 30, the "great power" and "great grace" of Acts iv. 33.—Yours in the Lord,

A correspondent writes :—"May I say how thankful I am for the banner you are fearlessly displaying because of the truth, in everything? Should the hospital you suggest be founded for Dr. Heywood Smith, it shall have a subscription most gladly, from a most grateful though not rich patient, who honours him as a true Christian as well as a most kind and gifted physician."

Mr. Spurgeon (says a correspondent) arrived at Mentone on Wednesday evening last week much improved by the journey. The weather has taken a marked change for the better.

Dr. F. J. Campbell and a party of students from the well-known Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind at Norwood, have sailed for the United States, where they will practically illustrate what can be done in the way of educating the blind. We heartily commend them to the hospitable sympathy of American Christians, and trust their mission may be an eminently successful one.

The City of London may well be congratulated that her chief magistrates for many years have been, almost without exception, men of high personal character, of large and generous sympathy, and of earnest purpose. The hospitality of the Mansion House within recent years, towards religious and charitable efforts of all kinds, has become proverbial. It was specially conspicuous during the double mayoralty of Sir R. N. Fowler, and the public testimonial just presented to that Alderman is only a fitting expression of a widespread feeling of gratitude and respect.

"Give a dog a bad name and then hang him." "When you have a bad case, browbeat the opposing witnesses." The aiders and abettors of vice have always adopted these tactics. Every now and then we meet with the epithet "The Shrieking Sisterhood." The other day a letter appeared in The Morning Post, entitled, "The Shrieking Sisterhood again." Does the point lie in their being a sisterhood, or in their shrieking? If God has made women sisters, and if He gave them the faculty of shrieking, when should they exercise that faculty if not when any of their number perish by violence or fraud?

"It is worth while," says an American exchange, "to take notice, in connection with the demand for more holidays for the labouring classes, that these are the very days of greatest temptation and moral peril for them." The Hon. Mrs. F. Jeune, one of those admirable English ladies who do so much for fallen women, writes in a late Review article: "Almost every lying-in hospital or workhouse will bear me out in saying that the number of women who date their fall from the different holidays of the year are a very large proportion of the women who come to these institutions to be confined, and I am compelled from my own observation to say that the holidays in this country are in some aspects a great evil, so far as a certain class of young women is concerned." This is painfully and sadly true. The remedy, however, cannot lie in denying the holidays, but in providing safe places and methods of recreation, and in forewarning the unwary of the perils which beset them on every hand. In raising the standard, also, of honour and virtue among men. A Pulpit silent and a Press dumb on this vital subject have much to answer for. But let every parent, every guardian, every employer do their duty, and a great deal will have been effected.

There is no schoolmaster like experience. It is a very excellent theory that all the dwellers in a city, high and low, should attend one or other of the churches or chapels in the district where they reside. But the theory inevitably breaks down, especially in the poorer neighbourhoods; the people do not, and will not, go to church or chapel. They imagine that should they go either they will not be welcome, or they will not feel comfortable. Having no "Sunday best" in which to array themselves, they do not care to be ostracised or looked down upon by the well-dressed crowd. The objection may be foolish, but it is not unnatural; anyhow, the masses of the people do not go to church.

It was a recognition of this simple fact that induced the London City Mission to appoint a Committee for arranging that Gospel services should be held on Sunday evenings in theatres, halls, and mission rooms. The success of the project, after an experience of a century, has convinced the most unwilling or the most sceptical that something must be done in the direction of this Committee's work. Weak and unworthy prejudice against preaching the Gospel in "unconsecrated" buildings has given way before the stress of a great necessity. Such a conservative institution even as the Established Church has, through a specially-appointed Evangelisation Committee, made this deliverance :—

> The multiplication of Mission-rooms in poor and populous parishes is a matter of primary importance, and the judicious planting of such Mission-rooms is often more useful than the erection of new churches and the subdivision of ecclesiastical districts.

The Special Services Committee may, therefore, feel encouraged in their desire to multiply Mission halls in needy districts. As will be seen from the report in another column of a drawing-room meeting, they are endeavouring to perpetuate the blessed memory of their late president, Lord Shaftesbury, by the erection of Memorial City Mission Halls. Two are already planned, and if public support is forthcoming no doubt others will follow. We believe also that some of the existing Mission-rooms need to be improved so as to make them reasonably comfortable and inviting. The City Mission is engaged in a great work, and ought to be munificently supported.

We would direct special attention to the letter on another page from the conveners of the late Conference at Manchester on "The Evangelisation of the World." Their experience as to the rich blessing that has followed the meetings should be a strong encouragement to Christian friends in other cities to hold similar gatherings on a larger or smaller scale. We are glad to learn that it is in contemplation to hold a like Conference at Sunderland; why should there not be one at Aberdeen, Glasgow (or Edinburgh), Newcastle, Leicester (or Derby), Brighton, Bristol, and other convenient centres?

We would venture to take a single exception to the remarks in the letter from our Manchester friends. Instead of reversing the ratio of interest in home and foreign missions, would it not be better to multiply the interest in both cases tenfold? The reserve of unused power in our Churches is so great that this might easily be done without loss to any existing effort.

We are very glad to observe that on the Wednesday of the coming Week of Prayer, one prominent subject of united petition will be, "The Young Women of our Land, and Work among them." Recent events have given a special importance and interest to this topic, and we trust that much fervent and prevailing prayer will go up in all the assemblies of the Lord's remembrancers.

☞ We have numerous pressing requests from a multitude of missions amongst the poor for help at Christmas-time. We hope our readers will help us to respond liberally.

YOUNG MEN IN CLAPHAM.—The twelfth annual meeting of the South Branch of the Y.M.C.A. was held on Friday, December 4, at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road. Notwithstanding the uninviting condition of the weather, numbers flocked into the spacious building to hear what has been done by the young men of Clapham. It was stated that their rooms, situated in the Fentiman-road, have been the place of much spiritual good to everyone who has been in the habit of attending the meetings. The situation however hinders their progress to a very large extent, and it is considered that if new premises could be obtained in the main road, far more useful work could be done. The chair was taken by Mr. Reader Harris. The report, read by the secretary, showed a good programme of work done and blessing received. Very earnest speeches were delivered during the evening by the chairman, Dr. R. Anderson, Rev. Burman Cassin, and Rev. W. Smith.

For the Young.

"AN ANSWER IS WAITED."

A KNOCK at your DOOR! What is wanted? There is a message for you. "For me?" Yes, for you; and an answer is waited. You get the message. "Very well, I shall give an answer directly." You take up again the book you were reading, or turn to your play or amusement. You forget all about the message. An hour after, you remember. You inquire. You are told that "After waiting a long time, the messenger thought you did not wish to give any answer, and went away."

Now, A KNOCK at your HEART! Last January, by this our little messenger, a message came to you, warning you of your danger, and calling you to come to Jesus. An anwer was waited. Did you give it at once, or did you put it off, and turn to your play? And another message came, and another, in February, March, April, May, June, July, August, September, October, November. And they were all to the same purpose. They pleaded with you to give your heart to the Lord Jesus Christ. An answer was waited all the while. Has an answer been given? If you forgot all about it, taken up with your book or your play, then what if this message should prove the last?

A lad, the son of a widowed mother, went to Australia. He promised to write, but no letter came. Regularly, time after time, for eight long years, the mother, who knew his address, went on writing, writing—but never one word in return from her ungrateful, heartless boy. Patient love conquered at last; a penitent letter came. How long, dear reader, has Jesus been sending you his messages of grace? for six, or eight, or ten, or twelve years? Has patient love yet conquered you?—or are you worse than the heartless boy, while Jesus is still pleading, "How often would I have gathered you"?

The last month of 1885 has come. The "clock of the year" will soon strike twelve. As a poor dying boy in Glasgow said to a companion, "Life's just like apples floating down the Clyde." Hasten! hasten! Young though you be, death may still be nearer to you than the end of the year.

Surely there are some among our readers who, since last New Year, have at least begun to think about their souls. Perhaps a word in the Bible, or from a sermon or book, darted through you, like a flash from the wrath to come. And the memory of that alarm haunts you still—like an awful flash of lightning which we saw in our boyhood, and which we have not forgotten to this day. That glimpse of wrath, that load of unpardoned sin, lies heavy on your heart. Do you intend thus to go on, heavy-laden and sad, carrying that burden, which grows heavier and heavier, all through life? The word is as true now as it will be were you to wait for twenty years—"Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Oh, will you not begin in the morning, that you may have a long happy day with Jesus?

Many years ago, there were two young girls who were bosom friends—Jane and Mary we shall call them. Mary, as well as Jane, was the child of a godly family. Jane, who was already a new creature, noticed the deepening sadness of her friend. She guessed the cause, but for a while feared to speak to her. At last, moved by her affection, she tenderly asked, "Mary, dear, is your soul at rest?" Bursting into tears, Mary answered, "Oh, Jane, you are the first who ever asked me that question." The end was that Mary, too, found rest in Jesus. Mary still lives: Jane, there is good cause to hope, has long been in heaven. But had it not been for that loving question, Mary might have been going on, unforgiven and in darkness, to this hour. Dear young reader, have you a load at your heart about which no one has ever spoken to you, and of which no one knows? Suffer us, in tender kindness, to say how much we feel for you; and to tell you Christ's message once more,—"COME UNTO ME, AND I WILL GIVE YOU REST" (Matt. xi. 28). An answer is waited. Will you come, or not?—The Children's Record.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S ORPHAN HOME.

THERE was a large attendance of sympathising friends at Miss Mittendorff's annual meeting last week, at 17, Old Cavendish-street, showing that the interest in the Home at Epsom has by no means abated. Mr. Weatherley presided.

Our devoted sister had much to tell of the Lord's goodness in providing for her large family of little ones; with deep thankfulness she mentioned that, beyond the death of one little girl, the Home had been kept unusually free from sickness. Bare cupboards and an empty purse often kept them waiting upon the Lord, but she could say that during the times of greatest difficulty and straits the children never lacked a meal nor went hungry to bed. At the request of Mr. Denham Smith, Miss Mittendorff gave a very interesting sketch of her work from its commencement, when she took care of two little babies under two months old; how, ignorant as she was as to the management of such little mites, she pleaded for wisdom and guidance, and in that, as in every other detail, that which was asked had been abundantly given. "If I were to give you an account of all the Lord has done for me, I should never cease." The Annual Report which has just been published will be found intensely interesting.

Dr. Gilbart Smith, from personal observation, told of the very excellent arrangements of the Home, of the economy and small outlay compared with the enormous benefits conferred upon the children. Dr. Partridge spoke of the deep interest he had taken in the work for many years, and of the happy little services held with the children when, from time to time, he has been in England and visited them. Dr. Picard said a few happy words in a similar strain, as an old friend and helper, and one who has seen much of the Home, he bore testimony to the great blessing such a work is to those who are fortunate enough to find a home with Miss Mittendorff.

Mr. Denham Smith impressed those present with the spiritual importance of the work: the infinite value of the soul of each child. It was a blessed thing to know that here they were not only rescued from want, but were led to the Saviour; abundant were the proofs that the teaching in the Home had not been in vain. Many interesting letters have been received by Miss Mittendorff, from girls now in service, showing that they had really given their hearts to God.

Deacon Abraham, who has an orphanage in Persia, closed the meeting with prayer, and it must have been felt by all present, as one of the speakers remarked, that these happy little meetings, year by year, bring us for one evening into a peculiarly holy and happy atmosphere. We would like to remind any who may be able to send a little help either in money, or otherwise, the smallest gift will be most acceptable at this time of year, and will be most gratefully received by Miss Mittendorff, at Clayton House, Epsom. She would also welcome any who would like to pay her a visit; she is at home specially to receive visitors every Thursday afternoon.

THE BIBLE IN THE FAR EAST.—At the last monthly meeting of the Western Board of the National Bible Society of Scotland, held in Glasgow, Mr. Burnet, of Ching Kiang, reported a journey of 900 miles through the province of Ngan Whuy. He had sold the entire stock of Scriptures he had taken out. Mr. Murray, of Peking, reported a journey into Mongolia, during which he visited two of the great annual festivals, and disposed of 5000 Mongol and Chinese Scriptures. The demand for the Bible in Japan was reported to be increasing. In view of such opportunities in China, Japan, Corea, and India, as well as with the hope of in due time pressing into Burmah, the directors remitted to the finance committee to consider what steps should be taken to raise a special fund to enable the society to maintain and extend its work in those countries in some more adequate measure.

THE STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

AS the Lord Mayor said in his admirable speech at the centenary meeting of this Society on Friday last, the survival of a charitable organisation so unfamiliar with the ordinary modes of proclaiming its existence, through all the changing fortunes of one hundred years, is some indication of its inherent vitality. Its founder was a Christian doctor, no doubt a member of some section of the one "Church of God" in England, but of which we do not know and do not care to inquire. Its earliest members were six like-minded persons, for the most part in humble circumstances. One of its first subscribers was John Wesley, who, with characteristic good sense, not only gave an impetus to its work, but helped, once for all, to fix its leading feature as a Christian society which knew no distinction of creed or party.

Its title, as the Lord Mayor so well said, is not to be understood as referring to foreigners, but rather to "the stranger" in the Scriptural sense—"I was a stranger, and ye took Me in." Throughout its long and honourable career it has set an example to all similar societies of simplicity, economy, discrimination in the administration of charity, and generous impartiality, loving sympathy, earnest concern for the spiritual welfare of all whom its friendly hand touches; a gift, not given by an "officer" over a barrier, but taken by a voluntary, unpaid Christian visitor to the home, and given along with kindly words of Gospel teaching and believing prayer; these have ever been the springs and governing principles of the Society. All the year round, and all over the metropolis, in silent, unostentatious, methodical fashion, at a cost so small that men of business cannot but express their astonishment, the two hundred and seventy visitors seek out all, without distinction, for whom help is solicited. The sum of £1251, divided in varying amounts among thirty districts, represents but a small part of the help actually reaching the poor.

To those who have an ear for the music of figures and are able to read between the lines, the tabular statement will, perhaps, be the most eloquent part of the report. To take one district only: In Southwark, twelve visitors relieved 240 cases, distributing £64 of the Society's money, and how much else they and their Lord only know. But the doing of this work involved 1289 visits, each one with its word for the Master, its incense of prayer, and its oil and wine of loving sympathy. Let us hope that Canon Hussey's heart-stirring appeal for larger means will result in the doubling and trebling of the £430 sent to the Mansion House meeting.

A NEW AMERICAN MISSION.

THE American Faith Mission is a new missionary organisation, with head-quarters at Oberlin, Ohio. The special aim is to provide the necessary home basis of operations for those "who desire to enter destitute fields, and live with and labour for the salvation of the people, and, like the early disciples, trust Him who called them to his work to feed and clothe them." The Board of Trustees will legally hold property that may be secured for the work, and receive and transmit, free of cost, such funds to the missioners as may be entrusted to its care. No stated salary will be pledged to any officer or missionary; donations designated by the donors for any particular missionary will be sent to that missionary, other monies will be distributed quarterly. Mrs. Mumford, of Philippopolis, has come into association with the board. She has at this time special need of sympathy and help.

The American Faith Mission, whilst adopting some principles that have been tried and proved, is in certain respects a new departure for that country. Its progress will be watched with much interest. Inquiries may be addressed to Rev. George Clark, Oberlin, Ohio, or in England to Rev. Dr. Asa Mahan, 27, Ceylon-place, Eastbourne.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Postmaster General appeals to the public not to give drink to postmen during the Christmas season.

The Times recently described the riot and drinking of former election times; in these respects we have greatly improved.

The Lancet hopes Lord Stanhope's attention will be called to the little respect shown for the law prohibiting payment of wages in a public-house.

At George-street Congregational Church, Croydon, it has been decided to use unfermented wine for sacramental purposes.

The Allan Line Total Abstinence Society now numbers 140 members, Mr. Allan says " its influence pervades the entire employés."

Recently a Good Templars' Conference of juvenile Temperance workers was held in Middlesex. Thirty-six lodges were represented, and there was a large attendance.

At one of Mr. Coad's recent meetings the chairman, a member of the Manchester Royal Exchange, said the drinking carried on there was a disgrace to the city.

The Voice states that the liquor trade in America employs 118 million dollars and 38,899 workpeople; while the woollen trade employs 96 million dollars and 86,504 workpeople.

Amongst the prominent Temperance men defeated was Mr. Hugh Mason. The Manchester Guardian states his party at Ashton-under-Lyne have decided to demand a scrutiny.

Mr. Glover has sailed for New Zealand under a three years' engagement as Temperance lecturer. A guarantee fund has been raised in the colony covering the three years' expenses.

Rev. G. S. Reaney, of Stepney, has been conducting a very successful Gospel Temperance mission at Dr. Macfadyen's church, Manchester. Ministers and laymen of other churches assisted.

At the Free Presbytery, Aberdeen, recently there was strong opposition to the formation of a Total Abstinence Society, but, with some modifications as to government, the proposal was carried.

Mr. Claflin, a recently deceased merchant-prince, of New York, when he became head of the business founded by his father, ordered the entire stock of liquor owned by the firm, to be poured into the street.

The National League are arranging for a National and Colonial Temperance Congress next July, in connection with the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, next summer, at Kensington. Many visitors are expected from abroad.

The League Journal sums up the result of the Scottish Parliamentary elections: 34 are for, and 4 against, Mr. M'Lagan's Local Option Bill; 10 are in favour of County Representative Boards; and 12 in favour of some form of local control.

A new halfpenny illustrated Temperance monthly, entitled, Joyful News Banner of Hope, is to be issued in January, by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. It will be in connection with Rev. Thos. Champness' Joyful News, whch last week gave a portrait of Miss Agnes Weston, and a sketch of her work.

ROWLAND'S CASTLE. — Miss D. Bax and Miss Smith have just concluded a mission at Rowland's Castle among the Congregationalists. It has been owned by God, many professing to have found Jesus.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN CAPE TOWN.—Dear Sir,—Permit me to thank your readers for their kind interest in the work in my hands at the Cape. The papers, &c., sent for the soldiers, sailors, railway-men, and policemen, were most acceptable, as there is a constant demand in making up the monthly packets. I have returned to England and would gladly give accounts of our work in South Africa, if drawing-room or other meetings could be arranged for the purpose.

(Mrs.) M. S. Osborn.

MRS. MUMFORD IN BULGARIA.—Mrs. Mumford has been called to Sophia to render service in caring for the sick and wounded at that place, the place to which a large portion of the sick and wounded in the army are brought. She found the expenses in getting to the place unexpectedly great. What she most needs now is funds to provide for, not only her own, but more especially the necessities of the sufferers to whom she and others are administering. Will not friends of suffering humanity promptly send aid in this crisis?

WHAT THE PEOPLE CAN DO.

The writer of the following communication to The New York Evangelist is nearly seventy-seven years of age. To such experience, says the editor of that journal, we may all listen with deference:—

Centralia, Nov. 17, 1885.

I see in your paper of the 5th inst., the question asked, " What can the people do?" Will you allow me to suggest a few things. The question is asked in view of the movement in your city to see what can be done to save sinners. In the first place, let me state a few things that took place in a country church in Central New York in 1825. I was requested to spend a week in said church while a student. I arrived there on Saturday evening. On the Sabbath the pastor introduced me to one of his elders, and wished me to go home with him, and assist in the meeting in the evening, and then visit with him from house to house during the week. After talking the matter over with the elder, and having a season of silent prayer, asking God what He would have us do, I asked the elder what he thought of our proposing to the church that they should ask Jesus Christ to come among them on the business of redemption, and to remain there until the work of redemption in that place should be accomplished. He remained silent for a while, then said, "I do not see any reason why that would not be proper." We then spent the time till the hour of public worship, in prayer.

At the proper time I made the proposition to Christians; I told them what a Saviour he was, that He would save whole families; in short, all the families in the place. I explained as well as I could His promise, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," &c. The night was mostly spent in prayer. Early in the morning we commenced to visit. In the first family we found every unconverted sinner there under deep conviction. Soon the elder declined to take any part. After we had made several calls, as we left a family he threw his arms around my neck, saying, "My dear sir, if God comes any nearer, I shall die." He spoke what I had felt for some time. In the next house we found them still praying. There we had a prayer-meeting, and asked God to stay his hand, and to strengthen us to know and do his will. During the day, every impenitent sinner we met we found to be under deep conviction. At evening it seemed that the whole village came together, and it was ascertained that thirty-two men and women had found the Saviour. The rest of the week was spent in a similar manner, and at its close, it was found that almost every adult person in the place had embraced Jesus Christ as their Saviour. I learned afterwards that more than one hundred united with the church at one time. Of those who entered the ministry, six went at one time as missionaries to the heathen. This was the result of having the right kind of help. There was no preaching; sinners were ready to inquire, "What must I do to be saved."

"Now, I think it a correct principle that what God has done for his people under certain circumstances, He will do again under similar circumstances. When I saw the good people of New York city making a move to save lost men, my heart was glad. But they want help; it is no small thing to cure all the love of sinning in New York city and Brooklyn, and save their souls. Christians can have all the help they need to accomplish this object, and it will be so safe and so efficient and abiding. Jesus Christ stands knocking at the heart of every Christian. Now suppose that every Christian in those cities should spend even one night in united prayer, that Jesus Christ would come among them and there abide, until the love of sinning was destroyed, and every fountain of iniquity dried up, and every soul become loyal to God. Why, I tell you, God would bow the heavens and come down, and would breathe the spirit of life upon all that moral desolation, and would make it as the garden of the Lord. I mean something very different from the ordinary influences of the Holy Spirit in revivals. In performing the labours in more than one hundred revivals, I cannot say that the Saviour was thus present in more than ten of them—I mean all that the Saviour meant when He said to his disciples, " I will manifest Myself to you," in other words, that He should be properly enthroned in the hearts of his people. Now let all those who visit be clothed with salvation, and they will have great power with God and man. All those who thus put on Christ Jesus, to them He gives the benefit of his name at the mercy seat, and they see and feel that it is proper for them to ask for as many and as great things as it would be for Jesus Christ to ask, and like Jacob, they will not take a denial. By thus taking hold on God, you will soon know that Jesus Christ is mighty to save. Elijah Buck.

PRAY.

Oh, in this time of deepest need,
  When Satan's hosts advance in might,
And faithful soldiers of the cross
  Go forth to battle for the right;
All ye who may not take the field
  Of active service on this day,
A mighty weapon ye can wield—
    Lift up your hands and pray!

This is no time to sit at ease!
  More fierce, more deadly grows the strife;
The powers of death and darkness rage
  Against the Lord of Light and Life!
Then dare we sit with folded hands,
  Or turn with careless glance away,
Seek false peace in forgetfulness?
    Nay, rather rise and pray!

They need, whose hands would open burst
  The prison doors of sin and wrong,
While beat on their faith-shielded breast
  The poisoned arrows of the strong;
Who bear the noontide glare and heat,
  Faint with long toil, and worn with care,
For strength to work till day is done,
    The aid of ceaseless prayer.

The need of our divided land,
  Rent sore by passions fierce within;
And theirs, the helpless victims borne
  Down on the foul, black flood of sin;
And theirs, who, in sin-darkened homes,
  Remember not God's light and air,
Who know not for themselves to pray:
    All ask one fervent prayer.

As, while on Horeb's sacred mount
  Were Moses' hands extended wide,
On Amalek's opposing host
  Back rolled the battle's fearful tide,
So shall the prayer of faith from heaven,
  Where our great Intercessor pleads,
Bring glorious victory, sin's defeat,
    And help for all our needs. M. H.

PANTOMIME CHILDREN.—With reference to the letter on this subject in our last issue, Mr. C. Todd, of the Theatrical Mission, Covent Garden, W.C., writes that he will be glad to co-operate with any friends in the country in providing for the spiritual interests of these young performers.

THE LATE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY. — Last Thursday the Earl of Shaftesbury presided at the annual meeting of the friends and subscribers of the ragged school in King Edward-street, Whitechapel, and unveiled a monument and bust of his late father, executed by Mr. R. C. Belt. Mr. Montagu, the honorary superintendent, spoke favourably of the operations carried on by the institution during the past year. Mr. R. H. Williams, the treasurer of the Ragged School Union, said the memorial and bust had been subscribed for by the teachers and scholars, the individual contributions of the scholars varying from a farthing, of which there were many, to one shilling. The Earl of Shaftesbury gave an address, in the course of which he remarked that if there was one thing that had given him hope and gratitude, and a feeling that the sun of Old England had not yet set, it was to see the unanimity, the heartiness, and the grand way in which the artisans of England had come forward as one man to do honour to the memory of his father. He hoped that the monument and bust they had asked him to unveil would serve as an example and a lesson to every one present.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MESSRS. MATEER AND PARKER have had a very encouraging Gospel mission at Oneonta, in the State of New York.

MISS ELLICE HOPKINS has addressed a series of meetings, during the past fortnight, at the Y.M.C.A.'s in the Manchester district. All the meetings have been largely attended, and of a most interesting character.

MR. AND MRS. CARTER have conducted a two weeks' mission at the Baptist Chapel, Thrupp, Oxfordshire. Very much blessing has attended their work. They are now conducting a two weeks' mission at Kidlington, a large village near Oxford.

WILLESDEN JUNCTION, N.W.—A ten days' mission in connection with the Presbyterian Church has been conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. There were evident tokens of the presence and the power of God's Spirit convincing of sin and applying the truth to the hearts of the people. Many testimonies were given. The mission of Mr. Lane will be long remembered, and his return will be hailed with pleasure.

PERTHSHIRE.—A most successful series of evangelistic services are at present being held in Comrie, Perthshire, by Colonel Oldham, Crieff, and Mr. Anderson, Perth. The meetings during the week were largely attended, and a deep impression made. On the evening of Sabbath, the 13th inst., Mr. John R. Macgregor, student, of the New College, Edinburgh, delivered a powerful address. Many remained to be spoken with, and not a few professed to find peace.

CLAPTON.—Two very earnest and remarkable addresses were lately given by Rev. T. Vincent Tymms, one in the Down's Chapel, Clapton, to fathers, and the other in the Morley-hall, Hackney, to young men. Both were distinguished for their plain speaking, and for the unflinching courage with which they dealt with the special temptations and sins of youths and young men. Are there not hundreds of other preachers who could speak out to young men as a class. It is a work needing judgment, discretion, and love; but it is a work which God will greatly bless.

RICHARD WEAVER has been conducting meetings in Pleasance U.P. Church, Edinburgh. Arthur-street, where the church is situated, contains a large number of non-church-goers, and it was with the view of rousing them from their sinful stupor that Mr. Duncan Napier, and a few others, secured Mr. Weaver's services. The audiences, says The Christian Leader, have not been so large as was expected, but there was a unanimity which compensated for smallness of numbers. Mr. Laird, the pastor, has lent his co-operation, as well as the workers in connection with Carrubbers-close Mission.

WANDSWORTH.—A very interesting and successful ten days' Mission, conducted by Mr. W. Spencer Walton, in Down Lodge Hall, has been brought to a close. The daily afternoon Bible-readings were a source of great spiritual profit to Christian workers and others, some of whom came considerable distances in order to be present. The evening evangelistic services were deeply impressive and searching, and were followed by unusually large after-meetings of the most hopeful character; many anxious ones being brought to deep conviction and tears. It is confidently expected that the abundant fruits of the mission will ripen, and be abiding. The work wrought is being supplemented by Mr. Swann Hurrell, who is delivering a series of evangelistic addresses. Christians everywhere are asked to pray for the mission labours carried on in Down Lodge Hall.

SOUTH DEVON.—My husband has returned from the North of England, and has since been preaching in this village of Milton, near Honabridge, South Devon, and some souls have already been led out of darkness into light. Among them, an old woman, eighty years of age, who had been groping in the dark (waiting to feel salvation in some way) is now able to trust fully in the finished work of Christ, and it is marvellous to see the change in her appearance and manner. When I came out here, about two months since, the people seemed dead or in a state of lethargy. I found a few Christians desiring a better state of things. We met (mustering four) to ask the Lord to work in their hearts by his Spirit, and now we are looking forward to see many more gathered in. I hope Christians will remember us and our work in prayer. My husband purposes for the next two or three months labouring here and in other parts of North and South Devon as called or led.

E. M. A. CHAPMAN.

MR. PASCOE'S WORK IN MEXICO.

IN former letters I mentioned the great opening for the Gospel in the hot country. On October 14 we were surprised by an unexpected visit from several of the new brethren from that region—three married men, two ladies, and a manservant; all mounted on handsome mules; people, animals, and trappings all betokening them to be influential folks. They had been thirteen days on the road. They remained with us twelve days. The day they arrived we had not a dollar in the house, nor did I know from whence to get a loaf of bread for them. The Lord sent them evidently, eager to know the way of God more perfectly, and He also provided so that we were privileged to maintain our visitors and their mules without the lack of a single thing. One of the ladies was a staunch Catholic when she reached here, and came only to accompany her brother, newly-married to the other lady, and they came on purpose to solemnise their marriage. But she became a fervent believer before she quitted us. They took away a great supply of tracts and Testaments. I lent them a pack horse, and they had in addition a pack mule they had brought. Six of our Indians volunteered to carry bundles of tracts, and went with the hot country brethren as far as Huetamo.

They left us on Oct. 26; on the 29th two other brethren from another part of the hot country arrived. These had been ten days on the road, had never seen even our colporteurs, were converted solely by our tracts, and came anxious to learn more. These left us on Nov. 2. On the 5th our six Indians returned, bringing the horse we had lent. A glorious field is open to us in the hot country. The intense heat, the abundance of venomous animals and insects, and the fiery nature of the people, render the hot country a sealed land to missionaries in general, so that we have there a great field for us to labour in. The people are terribly fierce, I find; all go armed, and use their weapons at a word, but they seem very open to receive the Gospel. I almost wish I could stop all our work in Toluca, concentrating all our efforts on this place and the hot country between us and the Pacific. Perhaps our present poverty is God's way of driving us into this important field. At any rate, I feel constrained to carry the Gospel myself down among the blazing heat and the alligators, and am planning, God willing, to make a journey there as soon as possible.

I expect my brother Frank, now in Bahia, Brazil, to come here before this year ends. If so I can, with an easier heart, leave this place and my family in his care whilst I spend a few weeks in the hot country, and sow the precious seed right down to the Pacific coast. As the heat there is something terrible, I should be glad to have one or two of those Indian pith helmets used by travellers in India and Africa. However, the way will be opened in due time.

JAMES PASCOE.

[Help towards Mr. Pascoe's noble pioneering work is received by Mr. J. Mercer, 29, Queen's-road, Southport.]

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN continues her addresses on "Life in the Holy Land" with the greatest acceptance and success. Last Friday she lectured to a large company at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on "The Homes and Haunts of Jews," much to the enjoyment of the assembly, which was given expression to in some remarks by Rev. C. Spurgeon, Jun. Miss Finkelstein lectures again at the City Temple at 11 a.m. on Christmas Day, the appropriate subject being "Bethlehem."

RESCUE WORK AT BRIXTON.—Mrs. Harrier (late of Islington) has opened a small Home for the reception of young unmarried mothers and babes. The mothers are placed in service and foster-mothers found for the children. Several young servants have been placed in service, and are now doing well. This effort is preventive as well as reclamatory, and is worthy of all encouragement. Help is needed for the care of the children. Mrs. Harrier's address is 6, Pope's-road, Brixton, S.W.

"THE DAY IS AT HAND."

ROMANS xiii. 12.

THE day of Christ speeds on! that wondrous day
Whose morn shall see the vanquish'd serpent bound,
The gather'd brotherhood of martyrs crown'd,
And all the wicked chased like chaff away.
Then shall the Jew to Jesus learn to pray,
The Gentile's feet in wisdom's path be found,
Salvation's song o'er sea and land resound,
And earth the beauty of the Lord display.
O Thou, to whom earth's many crowns belong,
Thy people for thine advent hourly cry.
For they would fain around thy presence throng,
Thy "Welcome" hear, and see Thee eye to eye!
Oh, quickly come, that we may raise the song
Whose far-resounding notes shall never die.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE (Marked thus*).

The Irish Evangelization Society has now been at work over ten years and has had very great blessing. It has pleased God to use their Evangelists in the proclamation of the Gospel to bring a very large number into the fold of Christ. The Society's work is extending and the Committee feel it to be right that the Church of God should more widely know of, and be invited to aid more largely in this work.

EVANGELISTS.

The Evangelists of this Society may belong, as individuals, to many denominations, but as its Evangelists they represent none. They go out for this Society, not as members of any particular body of Christians, and without in any way taking part, publicly or privately, in questions relating to denominational differences, but only as Evangelists, to preach the glorious Gospel of Christ to perishing sinners, in its fulness and freeness, and to seek, under the constraining power of the love of Christ, to win souls to Him.

The Evangelists sent out by the Society are always anxious to co-operate heartily with the godly ministers of any locality in which they are called to labour.

MEETINGS.

The Society is prepared to receive applications for Evangelistic meetings, in any locality from clergymen or laymen.

MEANS.

The work of the Society is maintained by voluntary contributions, and Christians are invited to share the privilege of this work for Christ. Those who are disposed to help are requested to do so at once. Contributions will be received by this paper, by the Hon. Sec., or by the Treasurer.

PAST WORK.

The Report of the year 1884 can be had upon application to the Hon. Sec., and will repay perusal.

THE COW CROSS MISSION

Under the General Superintendence of

Mr. WILLIAM CATLIN.

22nd ANNUAL APPEAL.

This Mission has for its primary object the preaching of the Gospel in the Mission Hall, and in adjacent Factories, Hospitals, Workhouses, Prisons, Public Houses, in Open Air, by the Sale of Bibles, and reading aloud the Word of God in great thoroughfares; by Cottage meetings and House-to-House Visitation; also Bible Readings, Mothers' Meetings, Temperance Lectures, Sunday and Week Evening Instruction to the Inhabitants of the parish of Clerkenwell, which has a population of 70,000 souls.

The efforts of the Mission are conducted under the general supervision of well-known Christian Friends, on purely undenominational principles.

The prayerful sympathy and pecuniary help of the people of God are greatly needed at this moment, and are earnestly appealed to, on behalf of this thoroughly Evangelistic work, that it may continue, as in past years, to be a means of spiritual blessing to perishing sinners, and that help in temporal things may not be lacking for the sick poor during the inclement season of Winter. It is sincerely to be hoped that through such help we may be enabled to continue our Halfpenny Dinners to the thousands of poor little children who will doubtless crowd in upon us from the second week in November till the second week in March.

A SPECIAL APPEAL.

"Retiring poverty still hides its head," and must be sought out to be relieved. We are particularly anxious to provide a plain but substantial dinner for a certain number of poor families, well known to us, especially those of the "household of faith," on Christmas Day at their own homes; also during the first week of the New Year, to give our Sunday School and Band of Hope Children an extra dinner of Roast Beef and Plum Pudding, and some articles of Warm Winter Clothing, &c.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; at the office of Word and Work, 48, Paternoster-row, E.C.; by Mr. G. Kirkham, 15, Beresford-road, Highbury, N.; Mr. F. Newth, 44, Percival-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.; also by

Yours obediently in the Lord Jesus,
WILLIAM CATLIN,

Collecting Cards on application.

Post Office Orders to be made payable at Amwell-street Post Office, Pentonville

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF H.R.H. THE PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

Mrs. Hilton's Crèche, Infant Infirmary & Orphan's Home,

12, 14 & 16, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, COMMERCIAL ROAD, E.

And Training and Convalescent Home, The Limes, Feltham.

Dear Friends,—As the needed help is not forthcoming, I am under the necessity of again appealing for funds, and trust you will kindly respond. I am in immediate need of £150 to meet current expenses, and, unless help is forthcoming, I shall not only have to refuse many distressing cases, but shall be reduced to the painful necessity of contracting some portion of the work. I need not further urge the claims of the little ones, as at this time the sheltering of young children is one of the most important missions before the Christian public.

Trusting that the Lord will incline your hearts to aid me in this time of anxiety,

I am, Yours in the Master's Service,
MARIE HILTON.

Gifts of Clothing and Toys for Christmas are most earnestly solicited.

All communications to be addressed to Mrs. HILTON, Founder and Hon. Superintendent, Langveld House, Burdett-road, London, E.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

SHOREDITCH IRON ROOM.

For upwards of Twenty-one years I have laboured in the Gospel among the masses bordering on the poor and populous Parishes of Shoreditch, Bethnal Green, Spitalfields, and Whitechapel, a work upon which the Lord has vouchsafed very many tokens of his favour. By the preaching of the word—both in the open air and in the Hall—not a few have been awakened, and have been turned from the power of Satan unto God.

Owing to the fact that many Christian friends who were accustomed to support the Mission have departed to be with Christ, "which is far better," I am left with but little assistance towards the expense of maintaining this Gospel effort in the midst of a district where the population is dense, the ignorance is great, sin is abounding, and the need is deep.

I am therefore led to ask, through the columns of The Christian, my brethren and sisters in Christ to render me help in carrying on this work. And I venture to hope that from many a Christian home and many a happy dwelling-place, some encouragement and assistance will be sent to those who, in literal obedience to the Master's word, are going out into the streets and lanes of the city, and compelling men to come in.

I shall be glad to send a copy of my last Report to anyone who will kindly send me their address.

21, Benthal Road, Stoke Newington, N. JOSEPH KNOWLES,
Superintendent of the Mission.

Donations will be thankfully received by Henry Thompson, Esq., 38, Mincing-lane, E.C. (Treasurer of the Mission); or by the Superintendent, Mr. J. Knowles, 21, Benthal-road, Stoke Newington, N.; or at the Office of The Christian.

The Book World.

The Lord's Prayer. Nine Sermons by W. T. Carter. Hatchards. These brief meditations on the clauses of the Lord's Prayer suggest to believers many precious thoughts. The discourses on temptation and forgiveness of sin are specially good. The personality of Satan is insisted on, and the two extremes of baptismal forgiveness and sinless perfection are shown to be equally unscriptural.

Expositor (December). 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. Very helpful, as it always is. Prof. Salmond's biographical sketch of Frederic Godet is extremely well done, and full of interest to the many who know what light and sweetness stream from Godet's expositions. "A Study in the Connection of Doctrines," by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, gives a special value to the number.

Family Record. 2s. 6d. Houlston & Sons. A book greatly to our mind. Keeping accounts goes far towards paying one's debts. With this book to help, no housekeeper who can read or write should find it hard to strike a clear balance every month. Besides the money column, the book provides for the systematic register of every event of interest either in the family or the social circle. We should like to see it in use everywhere.

Upton Chapel Sermons. A centenary memorial. By W. Williams. 6s. Passmore & Alabaster. Three excellent photographs of the first pastor, the present pastor, and the interior of the chapel, together with a preface by Mr. Spurgeon, and a brief history of the Church, will make this volume peculiarly interesting to all connected with it. But Mr. Williams' faithful and often glowing words will reach a larger circle. His texts are well selected and well worked out.

Daily Strength for Daily Living. By Dr. J. Clifford. 6s. 6d. Marlborough & Co. To discriminating readers these sermons will be of service. Taking grave exception to their teaching, as we do, in more points than one, we cannot recommend them to general readers. But those who know how to distinguish things that differ and to "prove all things" will find here many fine thoughts nobly put. It is a book instinct with the personality of an earnest, large-hearted man of high attainments and immense force of character. In an early issue we hope to give some of the many brilliant gems of thought that are scattered through the volume.

The Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review. Book Depôt, 6, Sutton-street. 2s. Mr. Toulson, as the energetic publisher of this review and other publications, is not only serving the body of Christians to which he belongs, but the whole Church of God. The review is able, varied in contents, well adapted to the times, and remarkably cheap. The same may, in measure, be said of all the seven magazines published at the same house. The sixpenny magazine is a marvel of beauty in illustration, and contains useful matter; it is equalled by that for young men and maidens; than this, nothing more admirable is announced for the New Year. The Primitive Methodist families and schools will be wise if they give to these serials a wide support.

The Mystery of God. These sermons, by Rev. T. V. Tymms, make up a very remarkable book, dealing with many well-recognised difficulties that lie on the threshold of the Christian life. It gives the ripe result of extensive reading and of clear and cogent thinking. We do not hesitate to say that Mr. Tymms has rendered a signal service to the whole Christian church. The earlier chapters embody a masterly historic account of Materialism, Pantheism, and Theism, given in a manner keen, close, and perfectly fair, combining therewith a searching exposure of their errors and their utter insufficiency to meet the moral needs of sinful men. But the strength and value of the volume lie in the succeeding chapters. Let any young man, perplexed with modern doubt, "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest" chapters v. to x.; especially let him master the Essays on the Miracle of Revelation, the Oracles of God, the Person and the Resurrection of Christ, and the Life of Faith. He will find in these pages a store of arguments to strengthen his hold on the Christian verities, and an arsenal of weapons provided for his use to repel the subtle attacks of modern infidelity. The author's style is clear, lucid and strong, while his spirit towards antagonists is characterised by a fairness and candour which must conciliate respect, even if they should fail to win over to conviction. (Elliot Stock. 7s. 6d.)

Author of Protestant Missions. By Rev. John Robson, D.D. 6d. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. This is one of the series of cheap Bible Class Primers, edited by Professor Salmond, of Aberdeen. In the present revival and extension of interest in Missions its condensed information is a most timely and valuable contribution, which we heartily commend.

The Secret of the Mere. By Rev. J. Jackson Wray (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.), is a story of life and chequered experience on two continents, told in the author's peculiarly striking and graphic fashion. The two heroes of the tale wander far away, literally and otherwise, but, like the prodigal of old, they return, and all ends well. The book has a lesson for fathers as well as for sons.

All those who believe in a whole Gospel of healing both for the body and the soul, ought to subscribe to the new series of Medical Missions at Home and Abroad, published monthly, by Mr. Standing, 14, Paternoster-square (1d.) It gives a concise and comprehensive review of evangelistic effort of the dual and apostolic kind in different parts of the home and foreign fields. We believe this two-fold evangel, too long neglected, is to be proclaimed with growing diffusion and increased effect in the near future; this interesting record ought to help it on.

The Dwellers on the Nile. Chapters on the Life, Literature, History, and Customs, of the Ancient Egyptians. By E. A. Wallis Budge, M A. Religious Tract Society. The sub-title provides a complete summary of this little book, which gives in popular language the best-established discoveries on this subject. To Bible students chap. iv., Illustrations of the Pentateuch from Egyptian Monuments, is specially valuable. As customs and antiquities are so profusely illustrated, it seems a pity that a map of the Nile and the surrounding country is not introduced.

To commend a volume that has gone through about fifty editions and has long been recognised as a Christian classic would be a work of literary supererogation. It is only needful to say that an "author's uniform edition" of Rev. Wm. Arthur's Successful Merchant has been issued by Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, to induce those who are not already possessors of the book to secure it in its latest form. In Mr. Arthur's hands the story of Samuel Budgett's honoured career has gained an interest and value that attach to the lives of few men in the commercial world. (6s.)

The Friends' Quarterly Examiner (1s. 6d. Barrett, Sons & Co.), is a review not without interest to others besides the members of the society for which it specially caters. The last number commences with a thoughtful paper by the Editor on the present controversy as to the part that Christians should take in politics. It also contains a charming analysis of the character and opinions of Thomas Bewick, a sturdy old North countryman, who had opinions, and did not fail to make them known. There are many other articles more or less relating to Quaker interests.

How to be Happy though Married. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. A cleverly got up repertoire of maxims and anecdotes, new and old, concerning matrimonial differences and their causes. Those who are not happy though married, may here find some useful hints for daily life. We trust it may make many such alliances run more smoothly, but it is also to be hoped that the satirical character of the title will not do anything to strengthen the feeling of dissatisfaction with God's Ordinance of Marriage, which, in some quarters, is one of the most threatening evils of the present day. The book is got up in a unique and handsome style, in every way suitable for a wedding present.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have issued a "Proverbs Series" of story-books by popular authors, each tale illustrating some well-known proverbial saying. They are admirably written, well illustrated, artistically bound, and would form very cheap and useful presents for the season, or school prizes. The price is 1s. 6d. each. The numbers we have received are: Fritters; or, "Its a Long Lane that has no Turning." By Sarah Pitt. Trixy; or, "Those who Live in Glass Houses should not Throw Stones." By Maggie Symington. The Two Hardcastles; or, "A Friend in Need is a Friend Indeed." By M. B. Hunt. Major Monk's Motto; or, "Look before You Leap." By Rev. F. Langbridge. Tim Thomson's Trial; or, "All is not Gold that Glitters." By G. Weatherley. Ursula's Stumbling Block; or, "Pride comes before a Fall." By Julia Goddard. Ruth's Lifework; or, "No Pains, no Gains." By Rev. J. Johnson.

Departed Saints: Where are they? By C. F. Dowsett. 1d. Nisbet. An intelligent and scriptural word of comfort, showing that when saints depart they are with the Lord.

A History of the Jewish People in the time of Jesus Christ. By Emil Schüver, D.D., M.A., Professor of Theology at the University of Giessen. Translated by Sophia Taylor and Rev. Peter Christie. 2 vols. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. This is a reconstruction of the author's former work, entitled "Manual of the History of New Testament Times," and the second division is published before the first. It is a very learned production, and will invite only the scholar and the student—amongst those such only as care for the history, language, literature, and institutions of the land and people of Israel. It treats elaborately the question of the widespread influence of Greek and Roman culture as illustrated in the names of towns and cities in Palestine; the institution of the Sanhedrim; the order, emoluments, and functions of the priesthood; together with a chapter of about 300 pages, with learned notes and copious references, on "Scribism," dating from Nehemiah, in which we have the development of "The Halachah" and "The Hagadah" and the names and character of leading Scribes on the authority of the Mishna.

The second volume treats of the origin and history of the Pharisees and Sadducees, regarding the former as proceeding from the ranks of the Scribes, and the latter as from the ranks of the priests. There is a short chapter on the origin and various opinions respecting Essenism, and a more lengthy chapter on Judaism in the Dispersion. This scholarly work is chiefly drawn from the Jewish sources of the Mishna, the Talmud, and Josephus. It is heavily weighted with learned notes and references, and with a variety of opinions of the learned on speculative points. The chief interest in the book to many minds will be found in the chapters on the Messianic hope, though, as might reasonably be expected, there is much that is incomplete and vague as to the Person of the Messiah, and the purpose of his advent. All lovers of the Jews may well congratulate the author on his interest in Israel, to which his work testifies; and also the publishers on the beauty of the Hebrew and Greek type, as well as the English. As an account of the Jewish people, their institutions, laws, customs, and hopes, as derived from Jewish sources, these volumes will have a special value amongst the ever-increasing number of Christians interested in Israel's history and destiny.

A small volume by the late Dr. W. P. Mackay, of Hull, will shortly be published by Hodder & Stoughton, under the title of "The Seeking Saviour, and other Bible Themes."

The Graphic of December 26 will contain a large and elaborately prepared map of the United Kingdom, printed in colours, and showing at a glance the results of the General Election which has just taken place.

Rev. Frederick Langbridge has undertaken to write a series of Sunday Chats for Little Folks' Magazine, which are commenced in the January number under the general title of "The Happiest Half-hour: Our Little Folks' Sunday Talks."

The speeches by Mr. Benjamin Scott and Mrs. H. Fawcett at the recent meeting in Exeter Hall, in connection with the imprisonment of Mr. Stead, have been published as a threepenny pamphlet by Dyer Bros. A penny life of Mr. Stead is now to be had from Mr. J. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row.

We have received the following New Year's addresses in addition to those already noticed: "The Covered Face" (1d.) and "The Four Lettered Word" (2d.), by Rev. P. B. Power (Hamilton); ' Conquering Captives," by Rev. J. T. Wrenford (6d. per dozen. Partridge); "Waiting and Watching," by M. R. Z. (3s. per 100. Religious Book Society).

Two excellent Services of Song have lately been published by Messrs. Bailey & Ferguson, 54, Queen-street, Glasgow, which may be commended to the notice of classes and choral associations Biddy, compiled by James Tipton, is a touching story of lowly life. Little Tiz is a Temperance story by Rev. David Macrae. The music in each case appears to be well selected. Price 4d. each, in either notation. We understand that the Service of Song, founded on Dr. Macleod's pathetic tale, "Wee Davie," and published by the same firm, has been greatly appreciated and may still be had REQUESTS.—Prayer for a family in great trouble through the mental affliction of the father. Praise for rich blessings received at the Mission at St. Chad's, Liverpool.

BRIGHTON.—On Wednesday, the 9th inst., Dr. Anderson gave an interesting and instructive lecture to a large audience of men only, on "Evolution, Creation, and Progressive Development," as revealed in the works and Word of God. It was shown that the modern theory of evolution as held by many of the scientists of the present day was antagonistic to a belief in the inspiration of the Bible. The creation of man and his tripartite nature were then dwelt upon, and the teaching of Genesis i. and ii. in reference thereto set forth. The lecture was listened to throughout with the deepest attention.

Notes on Daily Readings.

THURSDAY, DEC. 24.—EXODUS XX.

1.—And God spake all these words, saying.—The ordinary division of the ten commandments into two groups of four and six "was brought forward by Augustine, and no one is known to have supported it previous to him. The division into two groups of five each we find in Josephus and Philo; it is unanimously supported by the fathers of the first four centuries, and has been retained to the present day by the Eastern and (German) Reformed Churches."—Keil. The Jews, too, divide in this manner, as may be seen over the door of some of their synagogues. It is probable, moreover, that Eph. vi. 2 is a distinct reference to the fifth commandment as forming part of the first or great commandment (the words "with promise" being connected with what follows). "The real distinction between the tables appears to be that the first relates to the duties which arise from our filial relations, the second to those which arise from our fraternal relations."—Sp. Com.

20.—That his fear may be before your faces that ye sin not.—Not only was the law a revelation of what sin is, so that "by the law is the knowledge of sin" (Rom. iii. 20), but the accompaniments of the law—"thunderings, lightnings, sound of trumpet," &c.—were intended to strike terror into the hearts of Israel, so as to act as a deterrent from sin. But the result showed how little fear can effect in bringing the soul to God. Better for this purpose than "the ten words" in which God announced the law, is "the Word" in which He has announced the Gospel. "God . . . hath spoken unto us in his Son" (Heb. i. 2).

FRIDAY, DEC. 25.—EXODUS XXI.

From xx. 22 to the end of chap. xxiii. we have "a series of laws, some of them addressed simply to the conscience, like the ten commandments, and others having the sanction of a penalty attached. The context seems to make it clear that we may identify this series with what was written by Moses in the work called 'The Book of the Covenant,' and read by him in the audience of the people (xxiv. 4—7). Some (Hengstenberg, Kurtz, &c.) would add the ten commandments."—Sp. Com.

5.—I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free.—"We have in the Hebrew servant a type of Christ in his pure devotedness to the Father. But there is more than this. 'Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it' (Eph. v. 25). The apprehension of this love of the heart of Jesus cannot fail to produce a spirit of fervent devotedness to the One who could exhibit such pure, such perfect, such disinterested love. How could the wife and children of the Hebrew servant fail to love one who had voluntarily surrendered his liberty, in order that he and they might be together?"—C.H.M.

SATURDAY, DEC. 26.—EXODUS XXII.

5.—And shall put in his beast, &c.—"And shall let his beast loose and it feed" (R.V.). So the LXX. Vulg. Syr. "He who had allowed his beast to stray and consume the pasture or the grapes of his neighbour, had to restore out of the best of his possessions a like quantity of produce."—Sp. Com.

18.—Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live.—"This is the earliest denunciation of witchcraft in the Law. In every form of witchcraft there is an appeal to a power not acting in subordination to the Divine Law. From all such notions and tendencies true worship is designed to deliver us. The practice of witchcraft was, therefore, an act of rebellion against Jehovah, and as such was a capital crime. The passages bearing on the subject in the Prophets, as well as those in the Law, carry a lesson for all ages: Isa. viii. 19, xix. 3, xliv. 25, xlvii. 12, 13, Micah v. 12," &c.—Ibid.

28.—Thou shalt not revile the gods.—Benisch's "Jewish School and Family Bible" renders this, "Thou shalt not execrate God," the word for God being plural in form. Many eminent scholars take it so; but others regard the word here, as elsewhere, as standing for "judges" who represent God—so the Targums, Syriac, &c.

SUNDAY, DEC. 27.—EXODUS XXIII.

1.—Thou shalt not raise a false report.—The reading of R.V. is condemnatory of a more common evil,—"Thou shalt not take up a false report." Many who may not be guilty of raising or originating a false report have no objection to take it up and pass it on.

2.—Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil.—This precept and the one that follows are directed against the very common snare of attaching importance, and in some cases authority, to numbers. Thus catholicity, or the weight of numbers, is supposed by many to be a mark of the true Church, whereas it is truth, not numbers, which is the only safe criterion. Following a multitude in a course that is evil is here expressly forbidden.

4, 5.—"So far was the spirit of the law from encouraging personal revenge that it would not allow a man to neglect an opportunity of saving his enemy from loss."—Sp. Com.

19.—Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.—Some regard this as a prohibition of a superstitious custom, connected with magical incantations, others "as a protest against cruelty and outraging the order of nature, and as such, parallel to the prohibitions to slaughter a cow and a calf, or a ewe and her lamb, on the same day (Lev. xxii. 28), and to take a bird along with her young in the nest (Deut. xxii. 6)."

28.—I will send hornets before thee.—"The Hebrew word is in the singular number used for the species 'the hornet.' There seems to be no reasonable doubt that the word is used figuratively for a cause of terror and discouragement."—S. C.

MONDAY, DEC. 28.—EXODUS XXIV.

1.—And He said unto Moses.—The direction to Moses contained in vers. 1 and 2 was given on the Mount (see xx. 21), but is recorded here when about to be fulfilled (v. 9).

3.—All the words which the Lord hath said will we do.—This engagement on the part of Israel, which was immediately confirmed by covenant, relates not only to the ten commandments spoken in their hearing by God Himself, but to the words of God spoken to Moses (xx. 22, xxiii. 33), for it must be remembered that it was at their earnest entreaty (xx. 19) that the Lord, having spoken the ten "words," "added no more" (Deut. v. 22). What was afterwards spoken to Moses and written in the book of the covenant, and now formally accepted by them, contains no additional principle, for the ten commandments are "the quintessence of the whole legislation," but they specify details of application sufficient to show that obedience to the law must be far more than an abstract sentiment, and must find its practical expression in little details of every-day life, such as the treatment of servants, compensation to neighbours for injuries by cattle, fire, &c. The ten commandments may be called the principles of obedience, and the "judgments" which follow certain applications, by no means exhaustive, of these principles to practice. It is, however, well to remember that the covenant at Sinai is generally limited to the ten commandments (see Deut. iv. 13), "He declared unto you his covenant, which He commanded you to perform, even ten commandments, and He wrote them upon two tables of stone." Comp. also Deut. ix. 9, 11, 15, where the tables are called "the tables of the covenant."

TUESDAY, DEC. 29.—EXODUS XXV.

We now come to the ceremonial law, which is introduced immediately on the ratification of the covenant, whereby Israel had promised obedience to God's law. As this ratification of the covenant by blood meant that the penalty of death attached to the breach of the covenant, Jehovah must either inflict that penalty on all who transgressed the covenant—and who then could escape?—or He must provide a substitute in whom the law might be magnified and made honourable by his obedience, and yet from whom the penalty of death might be exacted and he be made answerable. All this was to be found in the promised seed of the woman, who should bruise the serpent's head, in the Son of God who should in due time be "made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law." Hence all the ceremonial law points to Him; the ark of shittim wood, overlaid with gold, points to the union of human and Divine natures in his person. The testimony (i.e., the tables of the law) within points to what his own words declare (Ps. xl. 8) "thy law is within my heart." God communing "from above the mercy seat" points to his being the only ground of communion with God. Whilst the shewbread and the candlestick set forth what his people, accepted in Christ, are to God on account of their union with Christ—"bread of presence" on which his eye ever rests with complacency, and his light to the world when supplied with the oil of his Holy Spirit.

21.—In the tabernacle of the congregation.—This is the first occurrence of this designation of the tabernacle, which, it is now generally admitted, should be rendered "tabernacle (or tent) of meeting" (so R.V.), it being the place set apart for Jehovah to meet with his people Israel, and commune with them.

WEDNESDAY DEC. 30.—EXODUS XXVI.

This chapter "contains the instructive description of the curtains and covering of the tabernacle, wherein the spiritual eye discerns the shadows of the various features and phases of Christ's manifested character. The 'fine twined linen' prefigures the spotless purity of his walk and character; while 'the blue, the purple, and the scarlet' present Him to us as 'the Lord from heaven,' who is to reign according to the Divine counsels, but whose royalty is to be the result of his sufferings. Thus we have a spotless man, a heavenly man, a royal man, a suffering man. These materials were not confined to the 'curtains' of the tabernacle, but were also used in making 'the vail' (ver. 31), 'the hanging for the door of the tent' (ver. 36), 'the hanging for the gate of the court' (xxvii. 16), and 'the cloths of service and the holy garments of Aaron' (xxxix. 1). In a word, it was Christ everywhere, Christ in all, Christ alone."—C. H. M.

Mission and other Appeals.

MILE END-ROAD — Rev. C. Caine, 38, Grove-road, E., minister of Lycett Memorial Chapel, Mile End-road, appeals for help in supplying the many necessities of the poor at this season.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL.—Mr. J. Finch, secretary of this institution, states in a recent circular letter that there is a deficiency of £4000, and he urgently pleads for help from the public. The office of the school is at 73, Cheapside, E.C.

WEST HAM, E.—Rev. Geo. Towner, 29, Park-grove, West Ham, E., pastor of the Carpenter's-road Chapel, Stratford, asks for aid in providing blankets, coals, and bread for the poor of the neighbourhood, and also a few mangles for poor widows.

WE are sorry to learn that Mr. Henry Cook, of the Gosport Seamen's Mission, is in great straits for want of funds in connection with his Gospel ships. We commend his work to the sympathy of our readers. His address is Sailors' Resort, Gosport.

HOVE, BRIGHTON.—A mission-hall is being erected here, and it was hoped to open it early in 1886. A fire has, however, unhappily taken place, which has destroyed the roof and a large part of the woodwork. £500 will be required to open the building free of debt. Mr. G. B. PASLEY, 35, Vernon-terrace, Brighton, one of the trustees, will gladly receive subscriptions.

MRS. MEREDITH'S MISSIONS.—About 100 women of the most miserable class are employed daily; over 3000 are substantially helped during the year; 850 are maintained at steady work; 200 children in Princess Mary Village Homes, taken from the worst perils, older girls trained in a separate school. The institutions are urgently in want of funds. Happy mothers and daughters who have plenty of this world's goods will surely send liberal help.—MRS. MEREDITH, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

THE GORDON DAY NURSERY.—This mission, besides holding services, classes, ragged school, &c., for the people, furnishes a refuge for destitute men and boys, for whom it strives to provide employment. It is now desired to establish a soup-kitchen for the winter. The meals will not be free, but charged for at a very low cost. Help will be thankfully received by the superintendent, Mr. A. C. A. MCLAGLEN, at the Gordon Nursery, 8, High-street, Shadwell. Gifts of old clothes, toys, &c., will be also welcome.

FIELD-LANE REFUGES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.—During the past year 620 men and women were sheltered in the Refuges, 187 boys and girls were maintained in the Industrial Homes, 24 friendless girls were trained in the Servants' Home, and 301 persons were placed in or assisted to obtain employment. Special help was given at Christmas to upwards of 1200 destitute persons, and distressed, deserving families. The funds are exhausted. To enable the committee to repeat these benefactions some £2000 is required before March 31.—PEREGRINE PLATT, Secretary, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.

NEW WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, Whitechapel.—Already 880 lads have become members, and the reading-room, evening classes, lectures, entertainments, and gymnasium are crowded every night. The place is so crowded that already we need more accommodation, but, unfortunately, four of the rooms cannot be occupied for want of furniture. We are £2000 in debt, and need funds to meet the heavy current expenses. Any help in the way of subscriptions, books, pictures, or furniture will be most acceptable, and will be gratefully acknowledged.—F. A. BEVAN, Treasurer, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; HENRY HILL, Hon. Secretary, 38, Bow-lane, E.C.

YOUNG WOMEN IN THE EAST-END.—Sir,—I am making a great effort to do something for the young women working in the neighbouring factories, and have succeeded in gathering some to a club held on stated evenings in the mission-house. The counter attractions, however, are so great that something more is needed to draw them away from the various influences which are ruining numbers. I am desirous of obtaining a piano, pictures, curtains, texts, and games to make the club-room more attractive. If some of your readers can help me I shall feel deeply grateful, for the work is most important.—HENRY A. S. PITT, London Diocesan Home Missionary, in charge of Christ Church, 618, Old Ford-road, E.

A CALAMITY AT SEA.—DEAR SIR,—Off Benzore Head, Giant's Causeway, on Wednesday, 9th instant, in a fearful gale, four men were drowned while at their nets by their boats capsising. Three of them were brothers; one leaves a widow and five children wholly unprotected for; the other two were the support of an aged father and mother; the fourth leaves a widow with six children—all the children are under twelve years of age. I am anxious to raise a fund for the relief of the two large families.—Yours very truly,

EDWARD MAYNE WADSWORTH,
Rector of Dunseverick, Bushmills, co. Antrim.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Dec. 21,
Only £300 required by the 31st.

NEARLY 1,300 YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS have been brought for admission to the Homes and Open-All-Night Refuge SINCE LAST JANUARY.

EVERY SUITABLE CASE has been admitted.

620 WERE LODGED at the OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE, which has been visited by me every morning, in order to advise and encourage all new comers, who were either placed in Homes, restored to relatives, or helped while seeking employment.

THE GOSPEL OF THE GRACE OF GOD has not been proclaimed in vain in the Homes, and many of the inmates have given evidence of a change of heart.

Financially the year has been a TRYING ONE, but now, at the close, Psalm lxv. 11 is being manifested; and although the Committee have no funded property, Government grants, or payments with cases, except in very rare instances, sufficient funds have been contributed with the exception of about £300, and I HAVE NO DOUBT that the LORD will dispose the hearts of HIS STEWARDS, and enable them to supply this comparatively small sum this Christmastide.

EDWARD W. THOMAS, Secretary.

Office: 200, EUSTON ROAD, N.W.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, will receive Donations.

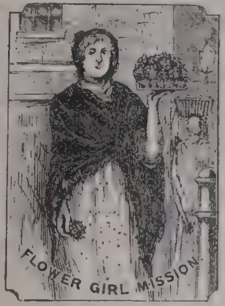
11 & 12, CLERKENWELL-CLOSE, E.C.

Extract from "Southampton Times," December 5, 1885.



We in London know well the army of flower sellers who in the season of "blithesome buds" beset us at every corner, offering their "posies of lilies or roses," and now that all nature is sleeping, and the fields and gardens are alike desolate and bare, there is little for these poor girls to do. The Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission and Flower Brigade is just now doing some of its best work. The flower girls who belong to it are well cared for when their season of prosperity is on; but now that the bitter trials of winter are coming upon them, they are taught the trade of artificial flower-making, and every endeavour is made to save them from the evil influences of their street life. Many of them, after a period of such experience, are trained for service, and taught domestic work of various kinds. I had a little boxful of the artificial flower work sent to me the other day by Lady Henderson, whose husband is the well-known head of the police, and who is in deep sympathy with the objects of this Flower Girls' Brigade.

Over three hundred little flower sellers have been taken from the streets since 1880, and about forty are now in training. Visitors are welcomed at the Home in Clerkenwell-close every day but Saturday, where they will see the girls busily at work—the elder ones make sprays of flowers, and I have as a specimen a full-blown chrysanthemum before me, besides many single snowdrops, violets, and buttercups, the pleasing work of very tiny fingers. Mr. Groom, the hon. sec. of the Society, is anxious to interest everyone in this branch of distinctly rescue work. The late good Lord Shaftesbury was President of the Society, and he classed it with the best and most useful Societies, and expected to see good results from it for our girls. Mr. Groom's address is 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell.

The work of the Mission embraces early visiting at the markets and streets; theatres, music halls, &c., at night. Home, Sick, and Poor Visiting, Open-air Services, and Tract Distribution, Sabbath and Week Evening Services, Sunday-school, Free Evening School, Hot Meat Dinners for Poor Children, Clothing Club, Penny Bank, Emily Loan Fund, Sewing Classes, Bands of Hope, Free Breakfasts to Poor Women in the Markets, Lodgings for the Homeless, Mothers' Meetings, &c., &c.

THE WAY TO HEAVEN.

PRAISE FOR THE NEW YEAR.

"I WILL greet the New Year with a song of praise,
Inscribed to my God and King, [days,
For the mercies that followed the Old Year
And the New Year's promising."—Extract.

"JUST INSIDE!"

WHAT BECAME OF A LIE!

"FIRST somebody told it:
Then the room wouldn't hold it,
So the busy tongues rolled it
Till they got it outside.
When the crowd came across it
They never once lost it,
But tossed it and tossed it,
Till it grew long and wide."—Extract.

"THOU ART WITH ME."

(Ps. xxiii. 4.)

A New Year's Address.

By JOHN E. LINNELL,
Vicar of Pavenham, Bedford.

Neatly printed on Tinted Paper, suitable for enclosing in Letters, or for General Distribution.
1s. per Dozen; 7s. per 100.

"Precious, precious words! In poverty or in plenty, in gladness or in grief, in health and strength or the prey of pining sickness, with pilgrim feet on life's rough path, or walking the valley of the shadow of death, still and ever

"THOU ART WITH ME."

"When the writer was once taking a class of little girls, he asked them to imagine themselves far away in some waste and howling wilderness. 'Would you expect to perish with hunger,' he inquired, 'if the Lord Jesus were there among you?' The children all said, 'No.'

"Then in fancy they went away to a far-off trackless forest. 'Are you not fearful, in a place like this, of being lost and left here for ever, with no one but the Lord Jesus to be your guide?' In chorus they still cried, 'No.'

"Once more he requested them to picture the united armies of earth, all arrayed against their defenceless selves. 'Are you not afraid,' he asked, 'having none but the Lord Jesus to protect you?' But the answer again was, 'No.'

"And will not the Lord Jesus, in Spirit, be with His people always?—in all places, and in all circumstances? Is it not His own pledged word, 'I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee'? Shall that which upholdeth all things be broken? or an end be found to 'never?' Nay; and we may add a word to our text without in any way taking from its blessed fulness, and each say, 'Thou art EVER with me.'"—Extract.

FIFTEENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
CASE of Miss M. McCORQUODALE, of GLASGOW.

This young lady's case was brought under my notice first in April last year by Mr. Barton, now of 35, McKinley-street, Glasgow, a friend of hers, who had seen a notice of my treatment in The Christian Globe.

Her disease had commenced with cold six months before. A violent cough came on, with pains in the chest, and dark, heavy, purulent expectoration; breathing very short. Friends very anxious concerning her.

The patient in a very few weeks derived such benefit that she discontinued the medicine—but too soon (as is frequently the case, sometimes from a desire to save expense; but it is no saving in the end to leave off before completely free from every symptom, and before the strength is perfectly restored). At the end of the year she had to resume it again.

About Midsummer Mr. Barton writes: "I am desired by Miss McC. to thank you much for your last medicine, and to tell you that she is now completely cured. She is very grateful, and feels she cannot say too much in its praise."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

This Society undertakes a work beyond the aim and capability of ordinary Missionary Societies. It is founded on an unsectarian basis, and receives its support from Christians of all denominations. Its Committee and Agents belong to several Christian bodies, and its Honorary Secretaries are A. SAPHIR, D D., and J. H. RIGG, D.D.

It has upwards of 100 who carry the Gospel to the Jews in England, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Russia, and Turkey. Tracts and copies of the Scriptures are circulated. Many Jews have by this Society been led to believe that "Jesus is the Christ." Much good has been done among the thousands of Jews in London by the Missionaries, by the House of Call, and by the new Mission House, with its important Medical Missions.

Increased Funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Rev. J. DUNLOP, at the Office, 96, Great Russell-street. Bloomsbury London.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz, those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

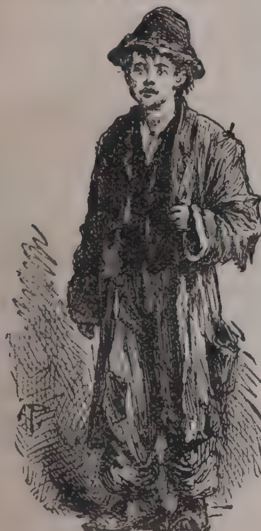
TWO CHRISTMAS STORIES.

WHICH DO YOU LIKE BEST?

My Dear Young Friends Everywhere,

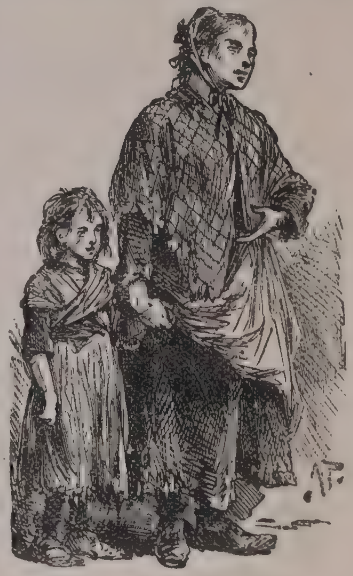
Two years ago, in response to my usual Christmas Letter to My Young Friends Everywhere, a certain Schoolboy named Jeremiah B——— made on Christmas Day a collection at the breakfast, dinner, and tea table of his own comfortable home, and sent me £16, the result of his kindly thoughtfulness and generous effort—enough, as he said, "to keep one poor street boy a whole year in your Homes."

Drawn From Life .



It so happened that just then I had among the many candidates for admission to our Boys' Home a wretched-looking waif whose name, curiously enough, was also Jeremiah, and I judged it a good idea that the gift of the well-to-do and happy Jeremiah should go to make his starving and half-clad namesake happy also for a year. The following was the poorer lad's plaintive account of his previous life. I will call it Story No. One:—

> "I haven't got a home, and never had none. Father begged about, and so did "mother and little Kate—that's my sister—the littlest one. Sometimes we'd a good "song, and that always brought a lot o' coppers, 'cos our Kate had such a stunnin' woice. "I've seed a heap o' people stand ever so long to 'ear 'er on a Saturday night, and the "wimmin would say, 'Bless the poor dear!' and they'd always give 'er somethin'. But "when father died in the 'orspital at Portsmouth, mother and us went on for a bit 'till she "fell ill with the staggers—that's wot they called 'em. They "was orful bad; and she took to the work'us, and little "Kate with her; and I've knocked about ever since—a "matter of four years or so. I'm regular starvin' now, and "I'd be ever thankful, sir, if you'd pity me and take me in. "I don't know nothin'—leastways, nothin' of any good to "me; but I'd learn fast enough if anybody'd learn me."



Mother and Little Kate.

So poor Jeremiah was at once admitted to the Home in Stepney, while the money sent by his rich namesake went to pay for his maintenance, training and education during the first year.

Last Christmas my young Collector went to work again, but, to his great disappointment, only gathered £9 5s. However, an uncle of his made up the amount to £16. Thus the poor Jeremiah was for a second year maintained in the Home by the generous efforts of the rich Jeremiah. Now I will allow the rescued boy to tell, at my request, the rest of his history, which, although very brief and not very well expressed, for he is a poor writer, I will call Story No. Two:—

> "Honnerd Sir,—I can't write much, but I do what you telld me. I like "cairpent^{g} very much and I like scool a little and I am getting on at my work and "I am happy enuf and I don't want to go away xcept to Canyda. This place is "lots better than the streets, and I've been in nigh two year.—Yr affecshunt,
> Jerry."

As his letter indicates, at the end of his first year the lad was received into our carpenter's shop, where he now is working away very diligently, waiting for the happy moment to come when he will start for his new home in the Canadian Dominion.

[PLEASE TEAR OFF AT THIS LINE.]

This COLLECTING FORM may be filled up on CHRISTMAS DAY, 1885, or on NEW YEAR'S DAY, 1886, at the Breakfast or Dinner Table, and then returned with the amount, either in cheque crossed "London and South-Western Bank," or in Post-office Order made payable at the General Post-office, and also crossed, to "T. J. BARNARDO, 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E." Note.—As the transmission of Stamps is attended with risk and loss, it is earnestly requested that, wherever practicable, Post-office Orders should be used.

Busy as Bees in the Carpenter's Shop at Stepney Causeway.

I would like to ask every reader of these pages which of those two stories is the brighter? Which do you like best? Examine the pictures carefully. Is the idle, starving Street Boy, or the busy contented, young Carpenter the more pleasing object? I shall know what your answer is if you, too, make an effort this Happy CHRISTMAS SEASON to help some other poor child, some homeless Tom or Joe or Jack, or, perhaps, some little orphan Susan or Mary or Kate. Even if you can only collect a few shillings, that will be some help to someone—only do your very best. Do it heartily and lovingly, and do it as to the Lord. Do it for HIS dear sake who was once Himself a poor little child on earth; and then not only will your own Christmas thoughts be bright and fair, but when the festive season is past and gone, the memory of some suffering child having been helped by your kind deed will abide with you to bless you.

Altogether upwards of Seven Thousand Destitute Boys and Girls have been thus rescued and cared for with earnest Christian solicitude, and more than 1,500 are to-day in our Homes. I need hardly tell you that this blessed work cannot be carried on without money, and if you will read carefully the list at foot, you will see how much good may be accomplished by even little gifts.

How nice it would be if the COLLECTING FORM at the bottom of the first page of this letter were filled up by EVERYBODY at the breakfast or at the dinner table on Christmas Day, and sent off at once to

Your affectionate Friend and Fellow-worker among Poor Little Lost Children,

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.
CHRISTMAS, 1885

Thos. J. Barnardo.

AS many children and families into whose hands this CHRISTMAS LETTER will come may desire to assist the HOMES in the continuance of their good work among DESTITUTE CHILDREN, a few practical suggestions are here added as to how help may best be offered, and what it will accomplish :—

16s. 8d. will spread a Free Breakfast Table for 400 Children of our Day Schools for One Morning; or £5 for One Week.
£1 6s. 8d. will give a Destitute child all the benefits of the "Homes" for A MONTH, or 6s. for a week.
£8 will do the same for SIX MONTHS.
£1 10s. will provide means by which 100 homeless children can be gathered from the lodging-houses and the streets to a SUPPER, at which the most needy may be selected for the permanent benefits of the Institutions.
£5 will APPRENTICE a child (disqualified, perhaps, by physical infirmity for ordinary pursuits) to some useful trade.
£8 10s. will pay for the complete outfit and passage money of any little one EMIGRATED, for prudential reasons, to our BRANCH HOMES in the Colonies.
£12 will maintain a child for a whole year in our LITTLE BOYS' HOME, Jersey.
£15 will keep a sick boy or girl in our Children's Infirmary or at a seaside CONVALESCENT HOME for six months.
£16 will support a healthy but destitute child for a whole year in any of our LONDON HOMES.
£400 will complete the purchase of the Freehold of our JERSEY HOME, already partly paid for.
£650 will build one of the 11 New Cottages, urgently required, at the GIRLS' VILLAGE HOME.

All communications should be addressed to The Treasurer, WM. FOWLER, ESQ.; or to The Director,

DR. T. J. BARNARDO,
18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

PLEASE NOTICE :—

Post-office Orders should be made payable only at the G.P.O., and should always be crossed, as cheques are, London and South-Western Bank, Bow Branch, E.

A MIDNIGHT CRUISE

(Printed at The Home by rescued waifs.)

by J. W. C. FEGAN.

CHRISTMAS EVE—in the shires all without may be mantled in virgin snow while the yule-log blazes brightly on the hearth within—the "waits" outside may be vainly striving to reconcile into harmony the contrary strains of violin, flute, cornet, &c., or the village children may be singing their wonted carols, while inside, face to face once more, eyes sparkling and hearts glowing, a loving circle is re-united round the old fire-side—but Christmas Eve in congested London's busy haunts!—the snow churned into mire, the flaming gas-jets instead of the soft starlight, the street-vendors' hoarse shouts instead of the clear treble of the child-choir, the rattling of carts, the rumbling of vans, and the thunder of passing trains instead of the rustic musicians' uncertain quavers—the throng still in seething confusion when the hush of midnight has fallen on the distant village—depend upon it in all the wide world there is not such a variegated scene of mirth and misery, plenty and poverty, multitude and loneliness as a Christmas Eve in the New Cut, Seven Dials, Shoreditch, or any of the many such teeming purlieus of our Great City.

It is nine o'clock, and we launch out for an all-night cruise in quest of shelterless, famishing street-lads, upon whom, unless we gather them in, Christmas will dawn lying asleep in the chill air of the frosty night on some straw in a van, or in some empty barrel by the riverside, or huddled up in a stone alcove of one of the bridges, or shuffling vainly along the streets far into the midnight, chattering and numb with cold, to diffuse some vitality through a frail, starving frame. We thread our way through the eddying crowds, scanning every loitering lad we pass, for some of the indications which bespeak to a practised eye the woe-begone "sleeper out" in his threadbare tatters, or the resourceless "run-away," comfortably clad, but far away from the home he foolishly deserted a few days ago—a penniless, shelterless, prodigal boy, for whom tender hearts ache, and many a sigh is heaved, and many a prayer breathed this Christmas Eve. Piteously pressing for sale his scanty stock of cigar lights, keenly watching for the chance to earn some halfpence by carrying a parcel, patiently running after one vehicle or another in the hope that when the driver stops he may perchance need some one to hold the horse's head, furtively loitering in the gutter outside theatres, &c., to catch the eye of some pleasure-seeker, and get his order to fetch a cab before the authorised link-man can secure the commission, despairingly plying a worn-out besom in desperate efforts to keep the semblance of a crossing, and glancing up now and again for a dole from the passers by—oh! the pity of it—precious young life wasting the golden days of youth in hand-to-mouth mendicancy, night by night defiled by what young eyes should never see and young ears should never hear.

"Big Ben," with a deliberate, decisive note, booms out one o'clock, and we follow to the tramps' kitchens the more fortunate young street-traffickers. The motley crew huddling together, the drunkards' songs, the blasphemers' oaths, the gamblers' quarrels, "Flash Charlie's" cavalier swagger, "Manchester Moll's" shameless blandishments, the boastful recitals of fraud and crime, the ridicule of all that is pure and holy—dear reader, judge me not to be unfeeling when I say that rather than they should have warmth and shelter at the price of such unspeakable moral contamination I would to God the thousands of street-lads in this mighty city were exposed night by night to all the terrible physical hardships of "sleeping out."

We go from one such den to another, till the sounds of revelry and strife die out as some of the lodgers stagger off to their beds, and others sink helplessly incapable, to sleep on the table or the floor.

About 2 a.m. we launch out again into the cold night air, and visit market-places, where under tarpaulins and behind piles of baskets "Nobody's boys," faint and footsore, have crept to snatch a little sleep; dilapidated courts, where several of the cottages are without any front door (each tenant-family being locked in its own room), and the passages and staircases afford a place of refuge for homeless wanderers of all ages and both sexes; "ruins," temporarily created by Metropolitan improvements, where the remnants of party walls or underground cellars provide a modicum of shelter from the cutting wind or the drizzling rain; inclosed yards in which, by scaling high walls or fences, we explore packing cases, barrels, &c., massed together in great piles—the nightly hiding-place of many a lonely waif.

Then, scanning en route the little knots gathered round the street coffee-stalls to see if some shivering, shelterless manikin has crept up to the fire for a few minutes, we make our way to some large market where many poor homeless boys are waiting, at four or five o'clock in the morning, to pick up chance half-pence by minding horses, carrying baskets, sacks, &c., before we wearily make our way back to the Home just as our boys are rising for the day. Thus nine hours, spent in traversing many miles, diving into haunts of misery and crime, climbing walls, scrambling over heaps of lumber, &c., bring our midnight cruise on London Streets to a conclusion.

What are the results of this errand of mercy? What kind of boys are saved thus? How have they been cast upon the world, and sunk into such depths of woe and sin? Let the following brief notes of recent instances of rescue through the agency of our Homes serve as illustrations of many hundreds who have been sheltered under our roofs during the last fifteen years:

G.C., 14—No father or mother. Deserted by his parents in a tramps' kitchen when he was about six years of age. The crossing sweepers, hawkers, &c., who lodged there used to pay for his lodging, and used to give him broken food and old clothes. When he was about ten years old he began to pick up his own living on the streets, paying 3d. for his bed (when he could now and then scrape the half-pence together), and buying old clothes at a rag-shop—4d. for a coat, 2d. for a shirt, &c., paying an old woman 1d. in the lodging-house to mend them. Has been known by policemen, cab-drivers, and coffee-stall keepers as a waif for some years. Remembers a gentleman very late at night calling to him "Come here, my boy," but was frightened and ran off as hard as he could. Had been sleeping out five consecutive nights before he was received into the Home here.

D.M., 17—Mother dead about five years. Father in New Zealand. Was brought up in Dublin by an aunt since his mother's death. Was sent by her to Montreal, where he worked in a livery stable; but when the small pox broke out last July he came across to Glasgow in a cattle boat. Walked from there to South Shields, and then got a passage in a collier to London. For three weeks before admission to the Home was wandering about, sleeping out at night, and quite weak through exposure and want of food.

A.M., 12—Father and mother both living. Father a tradesman with three shops in a large provincial town. Christian people with a family of five. Boy ran away from home with a sum of money because he had been playing the truant from school for some time, and was fearing detection and punishment. Was soon reduced to a penniless state, and had been starving for some days before he was received into the Home. Was immediately restored to his anxious parents.

C. S., 12—Father dead, a captain in the 94th Regt. Mother missing since his father's death in 1880. Until June, 1885, she lived a loose life, moved from place to place, and was then lost sight of altogether. The boy left her just before and made acquaintance with a street-boy. They wandered about together, living on scraps of food given to them, and sleeping out at night till he was sheltered in the Home.

D.A., 13—No father or mother. Father a French polisher, died while he was an infant. Mother died about six years ago. Was brought up by his brother, who was then only sixteen years old, married at nineteen, and three years later was too poor to care for his young brother any longer. The boy then tried to earn his living by "doing odd jobs" on the streets, living in a common lodging-house when he could afford to pay for his bed. Had been sleeping out some months prior to being rescued by us.

J.S., 14—Mother dead. Knew nothing of his father. Was brought up in Ashford Workhouse School, but his father, when in St. George's Union, expressed a wish to see his son, who he knew was in Ashford School. The boy was brought to him, and he was sent to prison for having deserted him. While the father was in prison the boy earned his living as a shoeblack. Had a situation, but fell out of work through the business being given up. Was quite homeless and friendless when he came under our care.

Such is the work for which, dear friends, I again entreat your sympathy and help this Christmastide. Your response to this appeal will in a great measure determine the extent of our operations for the next twelvemonths. We can make room for 50 more boys, and if our means justify the step, we will (D.V.) spend the last night of this year in such a midnight cruise as we have just described, and New Year's morning will dawn on many rescued waifs, no longer drifting to lifelong and eternal ruin on the cruel streets, but sheltered, fed, clothed, and trained in a happy Christian home.

For all your kindness to the 250 dear boys now cared for in our three Homes, and your sympathising and encouraging letters to me during the past year, I am deeply thankful. Attached is a form for collecting Christmas or New Year's offerings for the rescue of "Nobody's Boys." Please pass it round at the breakfast or dinner-table, and gather from your friends some tokens of their loving interest in our friendless waifs and strays.

Believe me, dear Friends,

Yours very gratefully,

J. W. C. Fegan

* The figure after the name of a town signifies an additional Corps. Manchester X. means that a tenth Corps has been opened there in the year.

III. Has the ground occupied at the commencement of the year been maintained?

From only eight places (in Great Britain) have we been compelled to withdraw, and to these we expect to return, as we have done to other places, from which we have retired in former years.

Many of our oldest corps are among our most successful ones; the great majority of the Stations already established throughout the world being not only self-supporting, but assisting, with men and money to spread Salvation elsewhere.

* This number is exclusive of the employés at the different business departments who were included under the heading of Officers and employés last Christmas, but are not counted this.

IV. Has anything more been done for the Villages than in former years?

1. Officers, whom we term Adjutants, are being appointed to take charge of the village population of a given District. The first experiment has been made in Suffolk and Norfolk, where in twelve months Eighty-six Villages have been occupied. Twenty-seven Corps have been established, producing amongst them a united income of £65 per week, employing Forty-five Officers, whom they support themselves, and in addition pay all, or nearly all, their own working expenses.

2. A new class of Officers is being raised and trained for Village work, many volunteering for it at very small salaries.

3. Travelling Vans are being sent out for this work. They have from nine to twelve Cadets and an Officer in command attached to each. These go from village to village with music and other methods of attracting attention; the cottagers are visited, the sick are prayed with, meetings are held in the open-air or in such buildings as can be borrowed, Bibles, "War Crys," and other Salvation publications are sold, and souls are saved. Where possible, a Corps is formed of the converts obtained, to be afterwards worked in the ordinary way. At present four Vans are at work:—

The "VICTORY" is in Suffolk; The "RESCUE" in Northamptonshire; The "FAITHFUL" in Wales; The "DELIVERER" in Lancashire.

The cost of a Van £123; the Fittings and Harness, £107; and the Horses, £70; Total, £300.

Our experience so far goes to show that these Vans will be very nearly self-supporting. The Cadets live and sleep in the Van, and, while spreading Salvation, are themselves being trained for Officers.

V. Have the International Training Homes been in full operation during the year?

There have been received into the Homes,	287 men and 414 women.	Total, 701.
There have been sent into the Field,	146 men and 271 women.	Total, 417.

During the year seventy Officers, either of this or of former years' training, have gone abroad. There are 165 Cadets in the Homes at the present time, and 35 in training in the Field with the travelling Forts.

During the year a number of Cadets have been trained in Paris after the model of the British Homes, for France and Switzerland. In other countries they have been trained by being stationed as second Lieutenants under special Officers in the Field.

VI. Has there been any increase on the amount of work done during the year?

Last Christmas we held 17,470 Services per week, or at the rate of 877,500 per annum.

This Christmas we hold 25,496 Services per week, or at the rate of 1,362.792 per annum.

That is to say, we are holding 8,026 more Services per week now than we were twelve months ago, which is an increase of Four hundred and seventeen thousand three hundred and fifty-two meetings per annum.

VII. Is anything being done for the purely "Heathen" Peoples?

SALVATION IS BEING PREACHED

To Chinese in Australia, California, and New York.
To Maoris in New Zealand.
To Red Indians in Canada.
To Singhalese in Ceylon.
To Gujaratis, Tamils, and other natives of India.

Natives of each of these nations have been converted and are being trained to deal with their own countrymen. In one part of the Canadian territory reserved for the residence of the Red Indians, there are 150 Salvation Soldiers, belonging to the following tribes—Delawares, Mohawks, Tuscaroras, Senecas, Cayugas, and Onondagas.

VIII. What Languages are now used in The Army to proclaim Salvation?

1. English in Great Britain, the United States, Canada, and the Colonies.
2. Welsh in Wales.
3. Gaelic in Scotland.
4. French in France, Switzerland, and Lower Canada.
5. German in North Switzerland and London.
6. Italian to the Italians in London.
7. Swedish in Sweden.
8. Dutch in South Africa.
9. Gujarati and Hindostani in Gujarat. } India.
10. Telugu and Tamil in Madras. }
11. Singhalese in Ceylon.
12. Maori in New Zealand.
13. Indian Languages to Red Indians in Canada.

We have Chinese converts training in London and Australia for an expedition to China, together with Officers and Soldiers speaking Spanish, Danish, Greek, and other languages, willing and waiting to be sent to their own countries with the message of mercy.

IX. What has been done through the Press during the past year?

We have during the twelve months sent out 21,100,000 "War Crys" and "Little Soldiers"; 300,000 of the monthly penny periodicals known as "All the World" and "Full Salvation;" 1,543,000 Salvation Song-books: 122,000 Tracts; 350,000 Pamphlets; together with 42,860 bound books.

That is to say, Twenty-three Millions, Four Hundred and Seventy Thousand, Eight Hundred and Sixty Publications full of Salvation truth have been sent into the world during the past year from our different centres. The weight of the above being about 24 Tons per week; making 100 Tons or the year.

These publications are issued in thirteen different languages.

X. Have the measures adopted for grappling more directly with the vicious classes been pushed forward?

1. New Rescue Homes for the reclamation of fallen women have been already opened in London, Glasgow, Plymouth, and Reading in this country, and in the Australian Colonies and other places.

In Australia, our success in this department has been most remarkable. In the Colony of Victoria a grant of £1,000 has been given by the Government towards furnishing a new home.

In London alone, seventy-seven girls have been hopefully reclaimed since the beginning of the year, and are now doing well.

2 Prison Gate Brigade.—Here again our success has been most marked in Australia. In Victoria alone it is calculated that 426 jail-birds have been reclaimed, the most of whom are now not only earning an honest living, but are actually saved men. So evident has been the public benefit of this mode of operation that the Government has arranged for the visitation of the prisons by our Officers, so enabling them to deal with the prisoners before their discharge.

In this country we have only made a start. Nevertheless, we have already a trained staff of rescued ex-convicts working in connection with our Prisoners' Home, beside many others who have been led to Christ, and are now earning an honest living.

3. Brigades for dealing with drunkards and visiting lodging-houses together with cellars, garrets, and other habitations of the poorest and most wretched classes of the populations of our large towns and cities, are being organised throughout The Army.

XI. Has any Barracks or other property been acquired by The Army during the year?

Twenty-four new buildings have been purchased or acquired for Barracks in Great Britian only, costing £24,000. Accommodating 25,465 persons, besides a large number of other buildings.

XII. Can anything be said as to the beneficial results of all this work?

1. The Indirect Results.—Many with good opportunity of judging say that the benefits conferred upon the world by The Army, through its influence on the Churches, are greater than those achieved by it within its own borders.

2. The Direct Results.—In Great Britain 187,408 anxious enquirers have been to the penitent-form. As nearly as can be ascertained, 83,300 have sought Salvation in other countries, making a total of 270,708.

If we could produce in procession the converts of the last year alone, what a wonderful spectacle it would be! There would be the Harlots, Publicans, Thieves, Infidels, Blasphemers, Outcasts, and thousands of other ordinary sinners belonging to the Anglo-Saxon race. There would be Freethinkers from Paris, Anarchists from Germany and Switzerland, Brandy-drinkers from Sweden, the Coloured Natives of South Africa, and Dutch Farmers from Natal. There would also be, among others, dark Tamils from Madras, mystical Buddhsts from Ceylon, low-caste Hindoos from the jungles of Gujarat, Maoris from New Zealand, Chinese from Australia and California, Red Indians from Canada, and wild desperadoes from the Southern and Western States of the great American Union.

Who can estimate the physical, mental and spiritual, results of such a War?

XIII. Has The Army taken part in any political agitation during the year?

The agitation which resulted in the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act was originated and very largely carried on to a successful issue by The Army. During its progress a petition was presented by us to the House of Commons nearly three miles in length, containing nearly 400,000 signatures. This is said to have been (with one or two exceptions) the largest petition ever presented to any legislature in the world. The preparation and presentation of this petition only occupied some seventeen days, and only cost a little over £70. All the costs of the trial which ensued were defrayed out of a fund specially collected for that purpose.

XIV. Have there been extraordinary difficulties during the past year which make these successes appear the more remarkable?

1. In the United Kingdom— The share taken by The Army in forcing the passage of the Criminal Law Amendment Act brought upon us the Armstrong prosecution, which not only absorbed much time and energy, but by taking up attention, interfered with the great soul-saving business of our enterprise. The illness of my son and daughter, in charge of The Training Homes, compelled the absence from London of the latter for over three months, and of the former for a considerable time. The continuance of Commissioner Railton's illness took him abroad for nine months, and I regret to say he is still an invalid, unable to take any public work.

2. In France.—The illness of my daughter left The Army without its leader for months together.

3. In Switzerland and Sweden.—The persecuting action of the authorities of both countries, and the extreme brutality of mobs in the former one, have made any forward advance possible only to heroes of the very highest order.

4. In the United States.—Every step onward has not only been taken, in spite of the ridicule and condemnation of the Press, of prosecutions and persecutions, but of a desperate effort made by the former Commissioner to destroy the connection of The Army between the two countries by appropriating our "War Cry" and deceiving our Officers. All this has made the fight in the States doubly severe.

5. In Canada.—Our Commissioner and several of his Staff have suffered severely from illness. The Editor of the "War Cry," a promising young Officer, was cut off by brain fever almost as soon as he got well hold of his work. And, latterly, the small-pox raging in Lower Canada has made meetings almost impossible in that district.

6. In India.—Misrepresentations of the most flagrant kind have no doubt destroyed the sympathy of many friends; in addition to which, Major Tucker has been prostrated with jungle fever, and been absent from his command for four months.

XV. What special plans are contemplated for 1886?

1. To continue the increase and development of our Staff throughout this country, so providing for the most complete and practical oversight of all our operations.

2. By this means, and specially by multiplying our village operations, to provide for the extension of the War much more rapidly than ever in Great Britain, so as to enable us at no very distant date to reach every nook and corner of the land. This will necessarily demand a great increase of the means for altering, fitting up, and erecting buildings for use as Barracks.

3. By sending the Cadets in vans, columns, omnibuses, and otherwise through the country, and by fixing them up for temporary settlement in the midst of the most dense and vicious populations, to give them a more practical training, and, at the same time, lighten very materially the cost of it.

4. To render greater assistance to our Forces abroad, both in Officers and money.

5. To take advantage of the cheap rates and passages in connection with the Colonial and American Exhibitions to be held next year in London, to bring together, in an International Congress, our principal Officers and friends from every land.

6. To add to The Salvation Navy, which has made so good a beginning under extraordinary difficulties, some strong sea-going craft; organizing, at the same time, all our sea-going Soldiers throughout into Naval Brigades.

7. To develope the great national scheme for the rescue of girls, fallen or in danger, as fully as means and opportunity will permit.

8. To connect our Prison Gate Brigade with Auxiliaries in every prison town; so that an effort should be made to convert every discharged prisoner, and enable all so converted to support themselves, without entailing any very heavy expenditure, beyond the first cost of fitting up workshops.

9. To follow out such plans as the Lord shall show us to be likely to effectually assist in spreading Salvation throughout the whole world.

XVI. Has the financial position been maintained during the year?

Notwithstanding the serious depression in trade, not only in this country, but throughout the world, which has involved many of our Soldiers in great poverty, and has caused the emigration of numbers more, the Corps generally have been enabled to keep themselves from getting involved into debt to any serious extent. This, however, has not been done without an large amount of self-sacrifice on the part of many Officers, numbers of whom have been content with the barest necessities of life.

The funds of Headquarters, as the Balance-sheet printed in the "Salvation War" shows, have been fully maintained; but a glance at this paper will show that this has been in no degree equivalent to meeting the requirements of so large and rapid an extension of the work.

WHY CHRISTIANS SHOULD HELP THE ARMY MORE GENEROUSLY.

1.—Because it is the only agency that on so large a scale goes down to the poorest and most vicious classes with the only remedy that can permanently benefit mankind; that is, the salvation of the soul.

2.—Because it is a direct and practical antidote to the growing Socialism and Communism of the times, the principles of which are destructive of the very foundations of all authority, human and Divine.

3.—Because from the self-sustaining character of The Army money given to it produces the largest return, both socially and religiously.

4.—Because The Army is not antagonistic to any other good work, but has proved itself to be, in thousands of cases, an encouragement and a stimulus.

5.—Because it benefits a man all round—body, soul, circumstances, and family for this life as well as the next. In tens of thousands of homes where formerly misery, drunkenness and devilry reigned, there is now food, clothing, education and happiness. They have been transformed from little hells to little heavens. The Salvation Army has carried with it to multitudes the enjoyment of the life that now is as well as the promise of that which is to come.

6. Because a little generous help will remove the present great financial burden. For the last three years our regular income has been beneath our expenditure, and the anxiety upon the hearts of those who have had the responsibility and direction of it has been a wearing strain. An increase of £5,000 per annum at Headquarters would set us free to fight with cheerful hearts. One thousand subscribers at £5 each would accomplish this. Could not the readers of this paper supply this number?

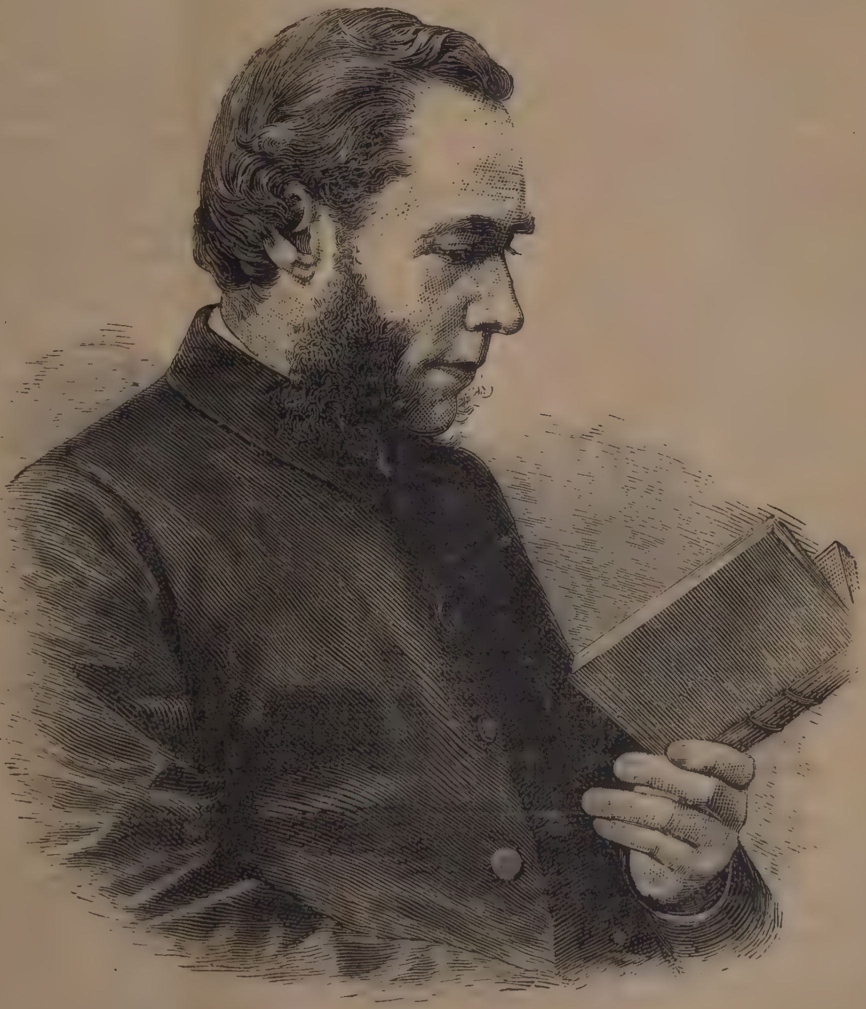
REV. J. B. FIGGIS, OF BRIGHTON.

A "BRITISH QUARTERLY" reviewer says of the subject of our portrait and sketch this week: "Mr. Figgis's sermons are the fruit of a fervent, spiritual life, and of an evangelical creed. They are devotional and practical, rather than theological. They will be read by devout persons with edification and enjoyment." In this appreciative and impartial critique, we have a clear hint of the tone and texture of the life and ministry of the much esteemed pastor of Lady Huntingdon's Church, Brighton. An Irishman by nationality, he has the warmth, but not the customary effervescence, of the Celtic temperament. That his qualities are of the steady and solid order may be gathered from the fact that he was yet a student at college when he was called to the pastorate of the church where he still abides, after an acceptable ministry of a quarter of a century.

Born in Dublin, Mr. Figgis received his early education in that city, where, by the way, he had for a schoolfellow the now famous soldier-peer, Lord Wolseley. The fight that Mr. Figgis has waged has been of a very different order, and has not brought him such world-wide éclat; but no one will suppose that he would change places even with the hero of the Red River and the Nile. After leaving Dublin, Mr. Figgis pursued his studies at the Independent College, Taunton, and afterwards took his degree of M.A. at the Dublin University. He held a scholarship at New College, London, during the principalship of Dr. Halley. It was when there that he was asked to preach in the church in North-street, Brighton, Rev. Joseph Soltau, the pastor, having died six months before. At his ordination he was privileged with the presence of Dr. Warwick, of Dublin, and Rev. Samuel Martin, of Westminster, each of whom had previously been his pastor.



Lady Huntingdon's Church, in Brighton, has had a prosperous history of 125 years; during that period it has formed a sort of link between the Church of England and the various bodies of Nonconformists. From Mr. Figgis's congregation four or five young men have gone forth as missionaries to China under different auspices, and about the same number of ladies have devoted themselves to deaconess work. Besides sustaining the usual agencies, the members of the church supply the teaching power for an undenominational Sunday-school in a needy part of the town.

Mr. Figgis has for a good many years past been closely identified with the movement for the promotion of a deeper spiritual life, and is a welcome speaker at holiness conventions. With Rev. Filmer Sulivan (now of London), and the late Rev. Wade Robinson, he took an active part in the arrangements for the now historical Brighton Convention, which has been the parent of many others of the same kind. While the cast of Mr. Figgis's thought is spiritual and devotional, it is at the same time intensely practical, as may be judged from the address on "Manliness," which we give in succeeding columns. He has ventured, though not extensively, into the realms of authorship. Besides small books, he has published two considerable works—one a very interesting volume entitled, "Lessons learnt in Italy and the Riviera," and the other, "Emanuel: leaves from the life and notes on the work of Jesus Christ." The latter Mr. Spurgeon has described as "a delightful volume." Another reviewer says: "This most interesting work does not lay claim to be a 'Life of Christ' in any such sense as those large volumes which have of late years been so numerous. It occupies a somewhat unique position; and to those already acquainted with Mr. Figgis's writings, will afford a fresh, but more effective example of that graceful blending of mental culture with tender, spiritual fervour, which has always marked his productions. . . . The plan of the whole is original and striking, and such as to throw into bold relief many points in the life and character of Christ which a mere historical survey might leave untouched."

The address given on the two following pages forms one of three on "Manliness, Womanliness, and Godliness," which are published together in neat book form (6d.); the short paper on "Womanliness" is just now of special value and timeliness.

Our portrait of Mr. Figgis is from an excellent photograph by Messrs. Mayall, of Brighton.

MANLINESS.*

By Rev. J. B. FIGGIS.

"Quit you like men."—1 Cor. xvi. 13.

MOST young men know that the Latin word for "man"—at least for a right manly man—is the word from which our English word virtue comes. Its derivative, as Dr. Trench has noticed, meant, on the lips of a Roman, physical strength and courage. It has sunk with the modern Italians, and with us when we speak of articles of "vertu," to be applied to external art. And it has risen in the English word virtue, to the act and habit of duty. We may feel a modest national pride in this, and may gratefully conclude that in the thought of Englishmen virtue is the highest quality of a man; and so that manliness is most fully realised when the virtues are most fully developed—the virtues, shall we say, of Bravery, Honesty, Activity, and Piety.

By Bravery we mean courage, physical and moral, to do, and dare, and suffer all that may become the man; by Honesty, we mean a due regard to the rights and to the feelings of every fellow man; by Activity, a full and orderly exercise of all the powers that unite to make a man; and by Piety, a becoming reverence for the Maker, and Saviour, and Sanctifier of man. Let us notice the precept under each of these aspects.

True Bravery consists of fear of God and fearlessness of man. There is, perhaps, hardly any instance of courage shown under varying circumstances so striking as that of Socrates the Athenian. He with equal courage endured the burning heat and biting frost that fell upon the armies of his country in different seasons and different lands. He fought with courage in battle, and saved the lives of Alcibiades and of Xenophon. And by and by he came home and suffered from his country's persecution as bravely as he had served for her preservation. He bore unflinchingly the contempt of the high and the low, and went upon his course of constant reformation of the manners and minds of the people. He was tried, and before his judges he was as brave as even at the siege of Potidæa or battle of Delium. When condemned, he bore his sentence without regret, and in his prison cheerfully spent his last days in the society of his friends, to whom he continued to impart his practical wisdom, and to prepare for following him to the world of purity to which he believed he was going. And so he died, brave alike in every position. His courage never forsook him, in the field, amidst the mob, before the court, and in the condemned cell; nay, not when the gaoler, with tears even in his eyes, brought in the cup of poison and handed it to him amidst his weeping friends. Did then Socrates fear no one? Yes, he feared God. "It would be strange if I kept my post in battle at your command," he said to his judges, "and if I did not keep the post assigned me here by God's command;" and then he added, in words strangely approaching to those of the Christian confessors, "Oh! Athenians, I honour and love you: but I shall obey God rather than you; and as long as I breathe and am able I shall not cease studying philosophy, and exhorting you, and warning any of you I may happen to meet, saying, as I have been accustomed to do, 'Are you not ashamed being careful for riches and for glory and honour, but care not nor take any thought for wisdom and truth, and for your soul how it may be made most perfect.'" Physical and moral bravery, then, which can do as well as dare, and suffer evil as well as serve the cause of good—which unites fear of God to fearlessness of man—such bravery is a requisite for manliness.

"Quit you like men"—i.e., be honest, for manliness is Honesty. It can hardly be needful for me to put you on your guard against theft. I daresay such a crime has never entered your thoughts. But remember there are other ways of being dishonest, even in money matters, than the very vulgar way of putting your hand into another man's purse or coffers. He is dishonest who does not scruple to defraud or overreach his brother in aught, to drive close bargains, to palm off inferior articles as the best, to try all artful ways possible to push his trade. It is hard for some of you, I know, to be honest, but if you would "quit you like men," be strong against all temptations to compliance with, or connivance at the wicked ways of the world. Men all around you may be falling down to worship the great golden image which commerce, our national king, has set up; but like the Hebrew martyrs—though as young, though as feeble, though as few in number amongst a vast multitude of idolaters—be honest enough to refuse such base homage, and God will bless you more at the end. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you."

You may be dishonest also by reckless expenditure. The extravagant man is in my poor judgment a dishonest man. Surely those who systematically pursue this course are as guilty before God as those who plunder the possessions of their neighbours. Where is the difference between stealing money from your tradesman's purse, or allowing that tradesman to expend for you money which you are unable to refund, and time and labour which you are unable to remunerate? I put it on the high ground of duty, and I say all such conduct is dishonest. I might add it is unhappy. Few things will tend more to weigh you down than the sense of pecuniary obligation. But you may be dishonest in other than pecuniary matters. You may be fond of robbing people's characters. To the young of one sex, and the old of the other, the love of scandal is especially ascribed. It is to young men I speak now, and I would say to them: never give way to the love of saying cutting things, because you believe them to be witty, and because they may be well received by your companions.

But if we call it dishonest and unmanly to steal away character, what shall we say about stealing human hearts? Is he honest who will put forth his efforts and his energies to win a friend that he may use him as the tool of his own infamy, that he may employ his money or his services for his selfish ends? Is he honourable who will weep, and smile, and languish in all gentleness and fascination to win a youthful heart, and when he has found it, will fling it from him as worthless? Is he worthy of the name of man, who, having by his fascination won some trusting loving soul, will make his love the plea for sin, will break that heart, and leave the maiden who gave him the precious pearl of her being to a black and blighted existence, perhaps to be marked by ever-darkening blots of sin? Whatever the world may say, God says, "Whosoever causeth one of these little ones to offend, it were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were cast into the depths of the sea." Look at such an one, as far as you dare to look at him. After such an act, or, perhaps, a series of such heartless, coward acts, he wins some other soul whom he, stained as he is with sin, thinks good enough to enjoy the honour of being his bride. He takes her to the altar, and swears, "forsaking all other, to keep only to her as long as they both shall live; to love and to cherish till death do them part, according to God's holy ordinance." But his oath is little better than his promise: how can it be better? As to love, he has hardly power left for that pure feeling to find a home in his polluted breast; as to cherishing—it is well if a year's time does not bring harsh words and hard blows against her to whom he is all the world; as to forsaking all for her, God knows how soon many a husband leaves home,

> "Leaves love, leaves truth, his wife, his child, > for what?
> The wanton's smile, the villain and the sot."

Yet he dares to lift his head amongst his fellows, and to call himself a man. Out upon it! We will not allow such a reproach upon our name; we will tear from him his claim to humanity, and brand upon his brow, if he has it not, as it is likely he may in his look, traitor, liar, coward, and, unless he repent—for such is Heaven's mercy that even such an one may repent and believe the Gospel—God will brand such names upon him for ever. How must such an one seek to hide him from Him that sitteth upon the Throne, and with scarcely less terror will he shrink from the faces of those whose lips once felt his guilty kiss. My brothers, you would not like to become that abject wretch; you are not that yet. But beware if your ideal of manliness be the man of the world, who sings a good song, and swears a round oath, and drinks deeply. If you too have begun to swear, and drink, and frequent the billiard-room and the casino, already you have lost true manliness; who or what shall save you from going down to the grave degraded and disgraced, in the fullest sense a dishonest man?

Is he a man who blights the society which he ought to bless; who goes through life making promises and breaking them, cheating tradesmen, and dying in debt, grieving parents, and dying in disobedience, breaking the hearts, and destroying the hopes, and covering with shame the lives of those who love and trust him most—and thus living and dying in heartless crime? His course is tracked with tears, under his feet are withering the fair flowers of love, and he has not the heart to break from the sin that has entailed such sorrow. Assuredly he is no man who acts thus.

My sisters, you would not like to have anything to do in forming such a character. God forbid that you should; but do you with sufficient sternness reject and frown upon the friendship of all who are turning ever so little from the path of virtue? I once heard a young lady of but fourteen summers say to a still younger girl: "I do like rather fast young men." I thought it then, and I think it now, one of the saddest sentences to which I ever listened. The mature man will be the matured likeness of the young man, and young men will be in a measure what you, their sisters and companions, make them. If you would not have a broken heart before middle life, give up the least connivance at their youthful sins. Instead of this, look, both of you, upon the pleasant countenance of the possessor of true manliness and honesty; one who would not touch that which is not his own; who is careful to cut off all unnecessary expenses; who walks through the world with a good conscience, feeling that he owes no man anything but "greater love," and even this he does all he can to bestow. He is kind and tender hearted; he robs no man of his character, but rather by his charity hides a multitude of sins. A man of high honour, and therefore delicately respectful to every woman, be she humble or high born. I care not what rank he is in, he adorns that rank, and wins the respect of those above as well as below him; and dying, he leaves that good name which is as "ointment poured forth," and his spirit returning to God who gave it, in heaven he rests from his labours, but on earth his works do follow him. Surely,

> "An honest man's the noblest work of God," and looking upon him we love him, and say, "We will go and do likewise."

"Quit you like men," i.e., be active, for manliness is ACTIVITY. We admire one whose physical frame tells of this activity; of his power and practice in every healthy exercise. He is effeminate who yawns away his time on the sofa when health allows him, and the weather invites him to be out gaining fresh strength. An enervated race was that of the Persians, who would never walk when they could possibly ride. Far manlier their ancestors who descended from the mountains in the full possession of physical energy. But if we look on the physically indolent and inactive as unmanly, should we not feel just the same towards the mentally inert? If we were merely animals, to exercise the animal powers would be claim enough to the title of manly; but as God has given us reason, and this as our distinguishing characteristic, he is no man who does not exercise it. Here, too, we must speak with limitation; just as we do not expect to see the same physical development in all men, so neither can we look for the same development of reason. There are giants in mind as well as giants in stature; but the artisan as well as the student may exercise his powers of imagination, memory, reasoning, and the rest. Nay, in the knowledge of men and things, in all that tends to quicken the practical energies of the mind, the man who mingles with the busy world has greatly the advantage over the book-worm or recluse of the library.

But it must be admitted, on the other hand, that for acquiring knowledge, for using the researches of the past, for studying literature and science, there is a great disparity between the opportunities of different men, and we cannot expect that in this our attainments should be at all equal. Yet even here much, very much may be done, as experience has abundantly shown, by the energy which devotes all spare moments wisely and well; so that many a mechanic may defeat the student on his own ground. But what I want you to observe is this: that whether much information from books be attainable by you or not, true wisdom is attainable, and to this end your faculties should be used; you should employ them actively, and direct them wisely; so will the intellectual powers, which are your honour as a man, be put in full activity. He is not manly, then, whose bodily powers are exercised, but whose brain is dull and inert.

But neither is he a man who has the intellect exerted while the moral and emotional powers are dormant. As well call a Greek statue, or a beautiful corpse, a man. Mere intellect is a cold thing:—

> "We start, for soul is wanting there."

There are powers of the heart, these should be exerted; there are powers of conscience, these should be at work. He is only half a man who can think, but cannot feel; who can laugh, but cannot weep; who can delight in books, but cannot rejoice in friends. Neither is he manly who has the physical, and mental, and emotional powers all in perfect activity, if the moral be lying dormant. When God gave man a body to labour strongly, and a mind to think sublimely, and a heart to feel intensely, He was not so careless or so cruel as to leave all these noble powers undirected and unmastered. He placed conscience there, and gave him the reins of the desires and appetites of the flesh. He placed in His hand a compass wherewith to direct the various and busy powers of thought. God set him upon the throne of the heart, and again and again has commanded every one who would attain to the true development of his nature, who would have the full and fair play of all his powers, to submit instantly and always to the dictates of conscience. Not merely then in the exercise of our powers, but in the right exercise of them does true manliness consist.

If you would set before you an example of one in whom this was well worked out; a man whose body was braced for toil and nerved for danger; a man whose mind was ever on the stretch to soar to subjects of sublimest purport; a man whose affections were deep and true, who was not ashamed at times even of manly tears; and who worked with the sweat of his brow, and of his brain, and of his heart, for the noble and glorious cause to which God and duty called him—if you would see such a man, we say, look at the man who penned our text. Look at St. Paul—patient under stoning and scourging; the bravest of the brave in shipwreck, yea, the life of the ship's crew, who but for him would have been in despair; sitting down as often in prison as elsewhere to pen those epistles, the thoughts of which were inspired indeed from on high, but the form of which shows all the energy of a mighty intellect; writing, with tears in his eyes, of the sins of those he loved, and rising to his highest eloquence when he tells "the breadth, and length, and depth, and height of the love of Christ." Look at Paul the aged, and the prisoner of Jesus Christ, as he is left in the unfinished memoirs of Scripture, or follow him in the history of the Fathers to the scaffold in Rome, where, under the effeminate Nero, the crown of martyrdom awaited him. Paul had a noble object in life. He loved it; he laboured for it; he thought for it; he suffered for it; he died for it. There, my brothers, there is the history of a man, be ye imitators of him; brace every faculty of mind and body, or in his own words, "Quit you like men."

This address would be incomplete if I did not speak for a moment about Piety as essential to manliness, for it is its glory and its crown. You have listened to what I said (may I say that you have assented to what I have said?) on the other points; listen now, also I beseech you, to what I have to say on this. Some of you may think piety an unmanly thing, very good for your sisters, but quite beneath your notice. Now what ground have you for this? Is it that there are few young men who are pious? But in other respects, few are manly in every sense of the word. Is it that pious men are in other respects unmanly? Suppose they were so, that is no proof that piety has made them so! You may be wrong in your ideal of manliness, or they in their ideal of piety; but sure I am that there is nothing to prevent a union of the two. Is there anything in piety incompatible with manliness? The pious man prays; is he the more manly then who refuses to ask favours of his best Friend? The pious man reads his Bible; is he more manly who neglects to study the wisest of books? The pious man trusts in an unseen Saviour; is he more manly who is the slave of sense? The pious man loves God; is he more manly who refuses love and gratitude to a Benefactor? You would not think it unmanly to do homage to the Queen; is it so to bare the head and bow the knee before the King of kings? You would not disdain to reverence the wisest of living sages; is it so to worship "the only wise God"? You would not refuse to be grateful to a preserver; is it so to give one's self to Him who loved us and gave Himself for us? When it is unmanly to love one's father, to be loyal to one's sovereign, to respect the wise, to esteem the good, to be grateful to the beneficent—then, and only then, will it be unmanly to love God, to trust in Christ, and to seek the indwelling of the Holy Ghost.

Manliness is bravery; ay, what will make so brave as confidence that all is right with God? Did piety make Hedley Vicars and Henry Havelock cowards? Manliness is honesty; what will help us to eschew all cheating, to avoid all evil speaking, to turn from the paths of the destroyer, half so well as the fear and love of God, and trust in our Lord Jesus Christ. Manliness is activity; on what can we so well engage our thoughts, as on the wonderful works of God our Father? To whom so deservedly give our affections as to the Lord Jesus Christ, our Saviour, and who shall help our conscience to carry out her decrees but the Holy Spirit?

Therefore seek bravery, honesty, activity; but, for their sake and its own, be sure to give a chief place to piety.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY AND THE FIJI ISLANDS.—By way of commemorating the introduction of the Gospel into these islands, an attractive volume has been prepared for the Society by the Rev. J. Calvert, for nearly forty years a missionary among the Fijis. The book, which is entitled, "Bible Pictures for Our Pets," has now been sent out, and an edition of 3000 will soon be distributed among the people. Miss Gordon Cumming, who recently visited these islands, and has published a description of the work of the missionaries, on receipt of a copy of the Society's book, wrote, "It is pleasant to think with what delight the book will be hailed throughout the isles, and how many a group will be on the mats whiling away the hot hours with this attractive companion. Truly a change since this day fifty years ago!"

THE OLD YEAR: ITS PORTENTS AND HARBINGERS.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST.

THROUGH the invincible loving-kindness of our God, we who, as sinners, have ought to be "in Christ" have been brought to the end of another year. With what benignity and tenderness has the Infinite Father borne with our waywardness! What forgiveness and acceptance have we found in the boundless sea of his immeasurable grace! His Father-embrace has held us in its ever-encircling care, and through the Saviour's perpetual intercession the blessed Spirit has kept us, pleaded in us, and comforted us.

And the "depths of his infinite patience" have still respected man's moral freedom, and endured the manifold workings of the self-life of our race. Another revolution of the globe on its orbit sends up to heaven the old and fearful story of human sins, and bears fresh witness to the riches of Divine goodness and long-suffering.

But it is for Christian brethren I write: for those to whom the cause of the Lord Jesus Christ is the supreme object in life. The times are ominous. Throughout Europe a momentous epoch is approaching. With us the year now ending has been one of violent politics, agricultural sufferings, heavy stagnations in trade, and embittered ecclesiastical strifes. It has been increasingly showing also how a neological Christian doctrine, which by great theologians would have been pronounced defective unto falseness, has been endured, then acquiesced in, and then openly preached in hallowed places which once heard Paul's inspired Gospel, and where "the arrows were sharp in the hearts of the King's enemies." Out of this false dealing with inspired Scripture, doubts have become rife; and, although infidelity has been beaten all along the line, floods of scepticism and of irreligion everywhere threaten the land. What then shall be said

IN RELATION TO PROGRESS?

This we must hold. The extremes in opposite directions indulged in by the sanguine and the morbid-minded cannot determine this question. Neither can it be answered by the material changes that are going on. If a man, to borrow an appropriate figure, has disease of the heart, his progress to health cannot be determined by the coats he wears. A bishop, speaking recently of improvements during late years in church-building, church psalmody, and ceremonial, warned against these things being taken as evidence of spiritual life, and added that there never was a grander place of worship than the Temple and its ceremonial in the days of Him whom the nation crucified, and at that time Temple, ceremonial and people were on the brink of destruction. New material conditions may offer new incentives to ungodliness. Nor can numerical increase of churches be taken as sure signs of progress. Multitudes, alas! of men and women are there who on the Sunday go to the table of the Lord, and are so little in sympathy with Him, that on a following day of the week the worldly see them in associations, where they inquire, "Are ye also become like unto us?" Rooms and halls are built for Christian work, and are often used for semi-theatres. Members of churches there are who are never seen where Christians meet to pray, and never express interest in Christ's work of human salvation, and yet are eager to intensity, both with brain and hand, to provide entertainments to which the unsaved can go without fear of a converting word being spoken to them.

No estimate of an age can be made if we forget or deny that which, while a great mystery, is, undoubtedly, the subject of the clearest revelation. There can be no honest acceptance of inspired Scripture if we refuse to believe that there is which has ever sought activity for itself through the race of man. And truly we may exaggerate this mystery. We know that mind can act on mind, and spirit on spirit. No sane man is there who does not, whatever his theory, take account of evil among men. To deny superhuman evil is superficial; and the denial of this fact plunges us in greater difficulties than the acceptance of it. What a fearful world we live in. What confirmations are there of that which Scripture speaks of when it tells us of him "that is called the Devil and Satan, the deceiver of the whole world." What unutterable vices and crimes are in these countries of Europe. What wars have there been, with their hatreds, and horrors, and bloody slaughters. As to the heathen world, half the human race is, to all intents, within the spell of a paralysing fatalism. There is, over these myriads, the death-grasp of a Buddhist atheism, the social severance and uncleanness of Hinduism, and a proud Mohammedanism with its implacable hatred to the Divine nature of Christ. The inspired Apostle writes of "spiritual hosts of wickedness and the world-rulers of this darkness," and a professed Christian who should speak sneeringly of this demoniacal kingdom, and of him who is its central head, has renounced cordial belief in Revelation, and has no longer reverence for the unambiguous teaching of the Lord Jesus.

But let us not forget that Old Testament seers foresaw

THE BEGINNING OF A NEW REIGN.

It was in relation to this new reign that the theocratic Psalms open with the exultation, "The Lord is King," which is the true rendering. Floods of devastation threatened the times when these Psalms were written; national gods claimed power; fearful judgments were impending; but over arch-enemies of might they saw a DIVINE PERSON who was inaugurating a new reign of righteousness, and would "not fail nor be discouraged until He had set judgment in the earth."

The progress of an age is, therefore, to be determined by the signs it bears of a coming kingdom of God. I know how difficult it is to do this, and what a posture of diffidence and of prayer it demands. Neither would I forget the mistakes of men who have misinterpreted contemporaneous events, and regarded them as the immediate forerunners of the end. How much has been done thereby to hinder the adequate effect of prophetic teaching, it is not easy to say. If, however, signs are latent, they are to be discerned. The faithful are warned against overlooking them. Underlying all Satanic counterminings, and all present aspects of humanity, there may at least be said to be

THE HARBINGERS OF A NEW ERA.

Among the generation about to be the leaders, two opposite currents have set in. Literary and other young men, having vainly concluded that Christianity was effete, have resolved to cast off Christian customs, and to sweep away the old religious obligations of social and family life. There is an informal but real conspiracy in this direction, out of which there have come desperate hatreds and workings of iniquity. But, on the other hand, a crusade for Christ, for purity, and for the emancipation of the earth, has remarkably drawn to it the most promising young men of the period. Not only so, Christian witnesses have thrown off a cloistral, self-considerate, and emasculating piety. They have recalled the figure of the Master, confronting alone the false opinions of his time, and rebuking corrupters in the metropolis of his nation. They have refused longer to be swayed by a sentiment that would regale itself with Christian hopes and fellowship, and which has shrunk from a contest that would save the prey from the mighty. At all costs, such witnesses have determined, in God's might, to maintain at once the truth of our holy religion, and at the same time its protests on behalf of humanity against all the powers of the enemy. A John the Baptist's work have they to do; but their testimony, like his, is a forerunner of a new era, and they can speak also of his works, through them, who is "Mighty to save." During no period have these distinct currents been so marked as in the year now closing.

And amid violent ecclesiastical agitations, unwarranted assumptions of sceptics, impostures of modern philosophy, and attempted changes of Christian belief, the Providence of the Spirit has made the closing year memorable for

UNUSUAL MOVEMENTS OF LEARNING.

Never, assuredly, it may be affirmed, has Christian scholarship offered richer fruits on the altar of the Lord than during this year. A.D. 1885 has witnessed the sending forth of the complete Revised Bible, and this will be its mark in the coming generations. If a scrupulous conservatism has marked the labours of the Old Testament Company, as a scrupulous conscientiousness did that of the New, the two-fold result has been wondrously timely. The intelligent and consecutive study of Holy Scripture has been powerfully furthered; the sole authority of God's Word accentuated; hundreds of millions who speak the English tongue have had their confidence strengthened that they now have access to the uncorrupted fountain of inspiration, and the devout will find patience and guidance in the bewilderments to come.*

Nor has this great gift to the age stood alone. The year has remarkably furnished solid and irrefutable proofs—both of the authenticity and the genuineness of the New Testament. Those who have followed this modern scholarship have ceased to speak of the cumulative probabilities in favour of Christianity, and have been almost prepared to take a firm stand on the assertion that Christianity cannot be untrue. No language can adequately depict the confusion that has fallen on a hostile Biblical criticism. Assumptions that lately were misleading even the educated as to the origin of New Testament books are now shown to be without proof; assertions that were thought the fruit of learning, now are manifested to have been inventions manufactured to suit a theory; before the touch of a wider learning, and the application of common sense, German notions that passed as truths are now proved to have been dreams; and to account for the origin of New Testament books by rival parties among the first Christians is fast becoming a forlorn absurdity.

* The criticisms which, after the manner of these times, have been passed on the New Testament Revision, have brought an untold loss upon many Christian persons; and so, in like manner, many are ignorant of countless improvements in the Old Testament, because on being told that it follows the phraseology of the Old Version they do not read it. I will give two specimens of minute but invaluable corrections in a single chapter, and which I have not seen noticed: In the Authorised Version we read, "I will come up into the midst of thee and consume thee;" the Revised puts "If" at the beginning of the sentence, and remarkably improves the sense. So, in a few verses afterwards, the Authorised Version sets forth as a fact that God's presence would be the separation of the Israelites from other peoples, whereas in the Revised Version it is the intention of that presence that is emphasised (Ex. xxxiii. 5, 16).

It may be replied, that the mere word of official teachers of religion carries less weight in our days than in any previous one. It is surely so. Christ made nothing of officialism, and an age is coming nearer to Christ's thought when simple officialism, however high its prestige, is discredited. It is at such a time that the supreme authority of the Word of God is rising to ascendancy. And with this everywhere

MAN IS INTERPRETED TO HIMSELF.

If there is any one testimony on which there is general agreement it is that Christ's plans are rapidly developing throughout the Eastern world. The peoples may cling to their corrupt idolatries, but it is as birds trying to live and build their nests in dead trees. In cities where Satan's seat is, there is coming up a new generation, with the cry: "Surely our fathers have inherited nought but lies, even vanity and things wherein there is no profit" (R.V.)

Yea, we see around us the evidence that the captives to evil are compelled to listen to the voice of their own original nature, and are not content with the devil's lies. If men and women have gone into a land of estrangement from God they have found "a mighty famine" in that land. If they have joined themselves to a citizen of that country, he has sent them into his fields to a hunger which would fill its emptiness with husks. How unhappy men are. How they complain of their dull pleasures! Out of what an unrest goes forth the cry, "Who will show us any good?" Sensationalism has all but got to the end of its resources. Animalism cannot stifle the spirit-want for something better than swine's food. Pleasure has of late years spread its endless attractions; civilisation has multiplied its facilities; appetite has gone after its new piquancies; art and literature have offered their ministry; infidelity and atheism have promised immunities; innate scruples have been overcome, and ancient barriers broken down. But a nature originally made in the image of God has found that the experiment has been a starving one. Poor, infatuated captives of the Evil One have come to find that they have been spending their money for that which is not bread. Their desiderated things mock them by their inanity, and they are hungry in the midst of their enjoyments.

Since these things are so, what is the duty of

THOSE WHO ARE JESUS CHRIST'S?

This we must see that, while our Lord has taught us that order and organisation in his Church are jealously to be observed, He, nevertheless, whose fan is in his hand, comes to purge his floor, and is bringing into judgment all those human ecclesiastical arrangements which have had their origin in the pride of worldly men. The true Church can never be in danger. "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." But we have come to a time when the different churches are little thought of by men. Their testimony for a kingdom not of this world is little heeded. The form of godliness carries no weight, and irreligious ritualism is but an empty parody. Before us, therefore, are times of breaking up and of perplexity. Let not the faithful be afraid. About many things which appeal to them let them hear the voice of the Lord that says: "What is that to thee? Follow thou Me." Neither let them be too curious as to the future. The good servant does not want to know his lord's plans beyond what his service requires. What that service is, must be indicated in a paper for the new year. Meanwhile we may close the present one with the words of a peer and poet who has died during its progress:—

> "'Tis well with deeds of good, though small, to strive;
> 'Tis well, some part of ill, though small, to cure;
> 'Tis well with onward, upward hopes to strive,
> 'Tis better and diviner to endure."

GIDEON'S TRIUMPH.—2.

Judges vii.

By Rev. JOHN URQUHART, Weston-super-Mare.

SUCH is the struggle to which we are called. We may be disappointed, but we are not dismayed. Though cast down, we are not in despair. We must prevail. When God can be defeated, we may be; when the eternal strength shall fail, our hope may die. The question of success or failure in the struggle against darkness and wrong is one which we do not, and which we shall not, entertain. Our victory is sure. Like soldiers in the battle, we may fall long ere the opposing ranks are broken and the enemies of the Lord are scattered, but our great Captain will raise us again, and we, too, shall drink the joy of endless triumph. There is but one question which is of moment for us. It is how the Lord will have us conduct this warfare, and how, pleasing Him who hath chosen us to be soldiers, we shall pass on with Him to victory. Then

WHAT IS THE SECRET OF SUCCESS?

Looking back upon Gideon's story we find there must first of all be self-surrender. It was because of idolatry that this affliction had fallen upon Israel. Gideon had therefore, before any other service of his could be accepted, to purge himself from Israel's iniquity. He was commanded to break down the altar of Baal, and to build up the Lord's altar and lay his sacrifice thereon. And he obeyed at all risks. The promise of his faith's after greatness was given in his faith's beginning. He knew that it meant breaking with his father's house, and exciting the deadly enmity of his fellow-townsmen, and yet there was nothing of all the Lord commanded which was left undone. The world's suffering, its oppression and its wrongs have all, like Israel's, but one explanation. They exist because of the world's sin. If we are to help the world we must first break with its transgression. The altars raised to its false gods must be torn down; we must repudiate the sins with which we have too long consorted. And the altar of the true God must be built with stones of contrition and prayer and trust, and the offering must be laid thereon which God has asked for, when He said: "My son, give me thine heart." Till this is done there is no help for us. If we are to smite the world's sin it must first perish within ourselves. Like Gideon, we must win a new name if we are to be used of God in doing this new thing. Have we done this? Have we stepped forth from the midst of the world's abounding transgression and given ourselves to God?

We notice next the necessity of unwavering faith. Gideon had to learn, like every other who has toiled for God, that the battle of righteousness and truth is ever but that those few are the men who are filled with unfaltering trust in God. God's servant had first to be forsaken that his work might be done, his confidence in man to be broken that his expectation might rest wholly upon God. His small army was diminished to less than a third. Gideon had to proclaim: "Whosoever is fearful and afraid, let him return and depart early from Mount Gilead. And there returned of the people twenty and two thousand, and there remained ten thousand." There are no cowards in God's army. There are trials which sweep the fearful and trembling out of God's host as the chaff is swept before the wind. If our ardour is to burn on when that of others is quenched, and if our resolve is to abide in strength while that of others melts away, it can only be from the conviction that the battle is the Lord's, and that, if He be with us, none may prevail against us.

And then, with self-surrender and the courage which springs from unfaltering trust, there must be deepening consecration. I do not think that we strain the words when we read, in the second test, that the men who lapped, putting one hand to the mouth while the other probably held the sword or spear, were men who even in their thirst could not forget the foe. Even in ministering to their necessities they could not forget the purpose for which God had called them. The sense of it filled and mastered them. It held the others less. They could cast everything away, and bow down and drink. And so again there was separation. The nine thousand seven hundred who bowed down to drink were rejected, the three hundred that lapped were chosen. While trust sustains, God's call and man's need must hold us. They who share Christ's triumph must share his spirit. It must be their meat and their drink to do the will of the Father.

And, last of all, the battle must be

FOUGHT IN GOD'S OWN WAY.

Not by scheming or political artifices. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal. Those who sat in darkness were startled by the suddenly uncovered lamps, their hearts were shaken by the trumpet blasts, and smitten by the cry, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Our confidence is not in our wisdom nor in man's, but in the brightness of that truth which we free from its earthen pitcher in the trumpet call to awake to righteousness; in that confidence we proclaim that the sword of the Lord and his Christ shall smite our foes and his. There must be no wavering in our testimony. We must lift up our voices with strength, and the Lord shall fight for us. We shall see greater things than these. A mightier and more enduring triumph than Gideon's awaits us. Man's heart shall be won for God, and all nations shall know and serve Him.

One word more. This page may come under the eye of some one who has heard the cry, "My son, give Me thine heart," but who has scornfully rejected the call. You did not know it meant this! You did not understand that it was an invitation to take your place in the ranks of this great army; to give your strength to righting this world's wrong, and chasing away its darkness and shame! You did not know the call meant this; but, knowing it now, can you any longer refuse? Will you not surrender to God the heart He seeks, and break with sin, and be the Lord's?

PLYMOUTH BRANCH OF THE Y.M.C.A.—A Report of this Association is published, showing its origin in a weekly Bible class carried on for twelve years. Rooms were taken, and formally opened a year ago. During the year eighty members have joined; valuable service has been rendered by the ministers of the town, the various classes have been sustained, and the special object of the Association kept prominently in view.

SOCIALISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

THE spread of Socialism is very marked on the other side of the Atlantic. Quietly, but surely, the forces are being organised for an attack on the existing state of things. The attention of some of the thoughtful ministers of the Gospel has been called to the matter, and they are asking, What ought the Churches to do to check the rising tide? The answer given back to them by the Socialists themselves is, "Let the Churches acquaint themselves with the facts." To a minister, personally known to me, the following statements were made by one of the leading Socialists in New York:—"Do you know how the people are compelled to live? Do you know that it is impossible to keep children from the sight of crime, and girls from a life of shame? And all because capital must have its dividend, whether labour gets a fair day's pay for a fair day's work or not? Do you know that still there are thirteen thousand children under thirteen years of age in the factories of New York State, who ought to be at school?"

The increase of education amongst the masses has led to an increase of investigation by themselves into the conditions of life around them. There, as here, the labouring classes are realising the awful pressure put upon them to extract the largest amount of work for the smallest amount of pay. Why do not the Churches take up these things, and ascertain facts, as the Socialist suggests? Is it because many of the prominent Church members are of the men who own the businesses in which the "hands" employed are ground down to the lowest possible wages? Is it because too many facts will throw too strong a light on the business transactions of many of the principal supporters of so-called religious work? No wonder the poor become estranged from the churches. They get so little help and defence from the only quarter that might be expected to help them in the struggle against wrong.

The following inquiry was made by my New York friend of the Socialist above mentioned. "Is Socialism spreading?" "Yes," was the answer. "Will it be a peaceable or a forcible revolution?" "Forcible," was the reply. "I have laboured for three years to prevent the shedding of blood, but it cannot be helped. It is sure to come." "Will the attack be on individuals or institutions?" "On individuals." These are significant utterances, and may not be altogether ignored. This man further stated that the average attendance of men at the Socialist meetings in New York held on Sundays was fifty thousand; and that one hundred thousand men in that city are learning the principles of Socialism, and getting ready for the coming struggle.

Another important fact. The head-quarters of Socialism is "The International Society," located now in New York, having been transferred there from London in 1872. "It is this society that fires at Emperors and dynamites Czars." It is a veritable "mystery of iniquity," working underground, and laying the trains of revolution to be fired in due time.

The additional political power given to the people will aid this movement. Democracy will be leavened by Socialism, and the further overthrow of governments may be the result.

How can the rising tide be stemmed? What can the Churches do? Let the preaching from the pulpits be the doctrines taught by the Lord Jesus Christ on matters affecting social relationships. When the Churches throughout our land shall recognise the headship of Christ, and Christians grasp the fact that the Head of the Church is a person, invested with authority to rule and govern his people here, and enable them to carry out the principles of his kingdom in daily life, then the maxims of the world will be discarded by Christian men of business, and the rules laid down in the Sermon on the Mount will come into force. Tens of thousands call Jesus their Lord, but they do not the things that He says. Many will come saying, by and by, "Open to us, O Lord;" but He will say, "Depart from Me, I never knew you!"

Where the principles laid down in the Word of God are practised, Socialism has no hold. At the great cocoa factory of Messrs. Cadbury, family prayers are held every morning at 9 o'clock. The chapel is always full: all go. The time is not deducted from the men. Said one of the principals to a visitor, "We commenced it because we believed in it; we shall continue it, if for no other reason, because it pays."

The firm of Messrs. Tangye Bros. hold a Conference three times a week during the dinner hour, when some distinguished literary man instructs the artisans. Political, social, or economic questions are discussed by him with them. In these firms strikes never occur, and men travel across England to be employed in their establishments.

Christian men of wealth must renounce luxury, ease, and the enormous expenditure of money on themselves and their households, and learn to invest it for Christ's sake, in improving the welfare of those whom they employ. To "preach glad tidings to the poor" is good, but to accompany the preaching by the manifestation of the grace of self-denial, and by giving liberally, is better. The Gospel of the grace of God must be lived out, not merely talked out. It has still its wondrous healing power, and will go far to remove the lacerations in men's hearts caused by the greed for wealth at the cost of the bodies and souls of men and women.

ANOTHER RECRUIT FOR AFRICA.

ONE of the Associates of the Women's Missionary Institute, in connection with Mrs. Meredith's work—Sister Helen Bisset—is leaving on a few days' notice, for Sierra Leone, to work in the schools of the Church Missionary Society. A meeting of fellow labourers and friends was held at the Institute on Wednesday, Dec. 16, to commend her in prayer to the gracious God, who is sending her to gather the little ones for Him in a new sphere of labour.

For three years Miss Bisset has worked in the schools of the Village Homes at Addlestone, and among children of other classes, to qualify herself for the life of a teacher, that she may have access to the young to win them early for Christ. Especially it has been her object to be ready to labour among African children whenever an opportunity offered to go to them. Ever since her own conversion, when almost a child, have the children of Africa been laid on her heart. With joy she responded to the request of the Church Missionary Society, for a lady to join their mission in the "Dark Continent." The station to which she is appointed is one to which peculiar risk is attached; but no consideration of health, climate, home, or any earthly tie, affects her earnest purpose.

Mrs. Meredith has vacancies for several ladies to train for work in Africa, Turkey, the Corea, and other parts of the earth still in darkness. Their are several in the Institute qualifying themselves for Medical Mission work; and, as all must go as soon as they have completed their course to their distant stations, it is important to be ready to fill their places, that there may be always found some waiting for the calls to go forth on the Lord's business.

SAVING THE CHILDREN.

SIR,—May I venture to plead for help on behalf of the Children's Aid and Refuge Fund, by means of which grants are made towards the maintenance of 5000 children in various Homes? Three officers are constantly employed in putting in force the laws relative to the rescue of destitute and neglected children; they also assist such cases as can only be reached by purely voluntary effort. Neglected children under six, or over fourteen years of age, can, as a rule, only be rescued from physical and moral danger, and prevented from entering upon a criminal career, by an agency of this kind.

Some interesting particulars of how children have been saved are given in a small pamphlet, which has been printed for private circulation, entitled, "Save the Children." It will be forwarded upon application to the Secretary of the Fund. On behalf of the Council, I earnestly ask for liberal help to enable us to continue this good work. We are in immediate want of £2000 for the purpose. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by Mr. Arthur J. S. Maddison, the Secretary of the Children's Aid and Refuge Fund, 32, Charing-cross, or by yours faithfully,

W. E. HUBBARD, Hon. Secretary.

OUR NEGLECTED CHILDREN.

A SOCIETY, entitled "The George Smith, of Coalville, Society," has been set in motion for the purpose of giving assistance, by the collection and distribution of money, children's picture and other books, papers, toys, cuffs, comforters, scrap albums, &c. &c., to Mr. George Smith, of Coalville's work among the brickyard, canal, gipsy, van, travelling, and other poor, neglected children, to whom he has devoted by far the best part of his life and substance. Mr. Smith has laboured hard and long to create a bond of sympathy between all classes of children, irrespective of either position, sects, or parties, and all classes of children will be eligible to become members of "The George Smith, of Coalville, Society." One of Mr. Smith's chief objects has been, and is, to get the children of the rich to help the children of the poor, and the children of the poor to respect the children of the rich; deeds of love, pleasure, and charity are the means Mr. Smith uses, and would like to see further developed, as a connecting link, to bind the children of all classes more closely together in love and good works.

Ladies and gentlemen willing to help either the ladies or gentlemen's committee, or in the development of the Society in other ways, either in London or the provinces, are kindly requested to communicate with the honorary secretary, pro tem., Mr. C. M. Schomberg, Parliament Mansions, Victoria-street, Westminster, who will be pleased to give all information relating to the Society. It is contemplated to form branches of "The George Smith, of Coalville, Society," in all the principal towns in the country, and the honorary secretary will be glad to hear of any friends of Mr. Smith, ladies or gentlemen, willing to act as local honorary secretaries to the branches, as early as is convenient.

THE LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION, 10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell-green, present their thirty-ninth annual report. All the meetings have been well attended, the Band of Hope has increased, services in the open air have been conducted in the very midst of secularists and agitators, and thousands have been brought under the sound of the Gospel. Mr. J. C. Sherrard, of Oxford-terrace, Hyde-park, treasurer, adds:—"The effect of all these various efforts has been to work a change not merely in the habits and tastes of the scholars, but of a large section of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood."

INDUSTRIAL HOME, FLORENCE.—I have been for some years collecting for my friend Dr. Comandi's Home at Florence ("Asilo Evangelico," 6, Via Aretena), where mostly poor orphan lads are fed, clothed, taught a trade, and brought up as Protestants, mostly joining the Waldensian Church. It is an excellent institution, carried on on Mr. Müller's principles. He not only has this Industrial Home, but also a chapel attached, where many Roman Catholics hear the Gospel; also a Sunday-school and missionary work at Sienna, his native place. He is a most earnest and devoted Christian. EDWIN MAUDE.

DR. PARKER ON LEVITICUS.[*]

THE earlier chapters of Leviticus, which contain the Offerings, the Consecration of the Priests, the Cleansing of the Leper, and the Great Day of Atonement, with their prefatory chapter, the twelfth of Exodus, which prescribes the slaying, the sprinkling of the blood, and the eating of the Paschal Lamb, are a treasury of revelation concerning Jesus Christ and Him crucified. This is a touchstone by which all teaching and preaching must be tested, for it is the very foundation of the doctrine of the Cross. There is nothing more contemptible than the ignorance of these ordinances, or more reprehensible than the rejection of them, by those to whom, in our halls of learning, is committed the education and training of men who claim to be called by the Holy Ghost to become ministers of Jesus Christ.

Not only would the Epistle to the Hebrews be unintelligible without this key to its meaning, but the Gospels would be equally obscure. Jesus had authority to heal diseases because He had authority to forgive sins, but the exposition of the ground and reason of that forgiveness is more distinctly set forth in Leviticus than in any other part of Scripture. The healing of the lepers and sending them to the priests, is only understood by a reference to the same book. John the Baptist's cry, "Behold the Lamb of God!" and Peter's appeal concerning Him, "who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree," and John's Apocalyptic vision of the Lamb in the midst of the throne, are alike explained by Leviticus and other parts of Scripture, antecedent or subsequent, of which Leviticus supplies the exposition. Peter's vision on the housetop is elucidated by Lev. xi. Paul removes the veil from Exodus xii. when he writes to the Corinthians that Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us. Light is thrown upon our acceptance in the Beloved by almost the first words relating to the burnt-offerings, "he shall offer it for his acceptance, at the door of the tent of meeting, before the Lord" (Lev. i. 3).

We have, therefore, looked with great interest for the volume of "The People's Bible" which deals with these transcendently important truths. At the outset Dr. Parker says that from one point of view Leviticus "may claim to be the most remarkable book in the Old Testament," though the occasion given for this does not seem to us the most important one. Further on he speaks of it as "focalising into one month the whole discipline of life." And, again, he says, "Without the Pentateuch, Christ, as revealed in the Gospels, would have been impossible, and without Christ the Pentateuch would have been impossible." "Leviticus is the Gospel of the Pentateuch." "Christianity is the consummation of Leviticus." Those are noble sentences, for which we are specially thankful, in a book which claims to be "The People's Bible," and from a preacher who has the ear of a crowd of City men at his mid-day Thursday lecture, and who has lately filled the chair of the Congregational Union.

Passing from the Introduction to the "Discourses," the question is asked, "What was the object of the offerings?" and the pregnant reply is given, "Atonement." "What is the meaning of the word 'atone'? To cover. How then does the word atone refer to sin? By covering it, hiding it, concealing it, and so destroying it. The object of the offerings was to atone, to cover, to hide. 'Blessed is the man whose sin is covered.'" "The worship of the ancient Church was . . . . a confession and an expiation—in a word, an atonement. This fact explains all. Take the word 'atonement' out of Christian theology, and Christian theology has no centre, no circumference, no life, no meaning, no virtue."

We commend these substantial verities, so emphatically spoken, to all evangelists and teachers, specially noting that with Wesley and Whitfield Dr. Parker understands atonement = expiation.

"He died to atone
For sins not his own."

It does not appear to form part of Dr. Parker's plan to enter minutely into the ordinances relating to the offerings. Each of his Discourses is the amplification of some general principle which he finds in the verse or passage which he makes the subject of it. But while this is ably done, we could wish that there had been a closer dealing with the five different offerings themselves, and with the variations in each. This, to some extent, is done in treating of the sin-offering for (1) the priest, (2) the whole congregation, (3) a ruler, (4) one of the common people. But if the subject had been more thoroughly studied in this way, we think the result would have been different—some inaccuracies of interpretation would have been avoided, and the Godward aspect of the offerings would have been made more prominent.

Dr. Parker, however, seems to disapprove of the more minute study of the Atonement or the Offerings. He says, "Distrust those who have theories of the Atonement." If God had only revealed the fact, and not the manner or method, of the Atonement, we should say "Amen" to this. But if we find that from Adam to Moses sacrifice had been offered, and that then, having typically redeemed his people by the blood of the paschal lamb, Jehovah instructs them by a five-fold offering, developing five distinct aspects of the Atoning Sacrifice, then we think we do well to seek, under the Spirit's guidance, to apprehend those distinctions, that we may apply them to the varied needs and experiences of our own souls and the souls of others.

We think the following paragraph (from which we have already quoted the concluding sentence) is not only partial and imperfect, but inaccurate :—

> "The blood was the life; to offer the blood was typically to die: in emblem the sinner slew himself. Now look at the development—the burnt-offering, consecration; the peace-offering, the humanity of religion; the sin-offering, atonement, sacrifice, propitiation—words not to be caught within a theory, and to be seen only once in a lifetime. Distrust those who have theories of the Atonement."

Only in a very secondary sense can it be said that "in emblem the sinner slew himself." On another page Dr. Parker gives the true teaching when he quotes Dr. Watts :—

"By faith I lay my hand
On that dear head of Thine."

It was the vicarious death of Christ, not the sinner's own death, that was principally shown in the slaying of the victim. The burnt-offering, no less than the sin-offering, was an atoning sacrifice (i. 4). The peace-offering did not represent "the humanity of religion," but peace with God through the blood of the Cross.

We believe that the love of God is infinitely deeper, and his grace infinitely more free, than our narrow conceptions of them, but the passage on page 30 appears to us unguarded and unsafe, even with the proviso that "we would speak these words cautiously, and with distinct reservation." The passage is based upon the fallacy that the patriarchal burnt-offering represented the indestructible God-seeking element in human nature . . . "if they are offering the fire of an earnest and fervent wish, that fire will be accepted in its fullest meaning." This is a mistake. The fire does not represent the human aspiration, but the requirement of the Divine righteousness. The fire was neither offered by man nor accepted by God as a human offering. It came down from heaven, and was ever burning on the altar, as Dr. Parker himself shows elsewhere.

Only half this volume is occupied with Leviticus, the other half treats of the first twenty-six chapters of Numbers, of which we have not space to speak.

The discourses abound with sententious and pregnant passages—grand and homely, tender and severe, eloquent in expression, and reverent in tone. No two persons see the same rainbow, no two minds gather precisely the same impressions from the Bible. No other man will see exactly what Dr. Parker sees—a few will see more, the many will see less; but whether less or more, none will read without profit if he seeks to discern the truth rather than to find out the faults.

For the Young.

THE STORY OF AN OLD MAN.

I DARESAY you have read many stories about children, so I am going to tell you a true story about an old man. Do you remember that hard winter we had some years ago, when you were quite little, when the snow was on the ground for a long time, and such numbers of birds died of cold and starvation? In that winter the old man about whom I'm going to tell you, slipped on the ice and fell, hurting himself so much that he had to spend many weeks in bed.

It was then that my sister and I went to see him. The first time I saw him he looked so funny! He wore a long nightcap, and he would scarcely speak to me, he was so cross at being laid up. However, after a while, we became friends, and then I ventured to ask him if he knew the Lord Jesus as his Saviour. But, though he had lived eighty-eight years in the world, he had never spent one of them for the Lord, and when we began to speak about his soul he began to speak about the weather. What do you think we did? Do you think we gave him up? No! We prayed for him. God hears prayer, and one day that old man told us that he had found out that he was a great sinner, and it had frightened him dreadfully. We were so glad to hear that, and we said: "Yes! You are a great sinner, but Jesus is a great Saviour. He died for sinners, and He died for you."

For a long time the poor old man could not understand what we meant. One day he said: "Satan tells me I am too bad. I have served him for eighty years, and I don't believe Jesus will have me!" We repeated to him that text, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out," until he knew it by heart, and then we left him to think it over.

The next time we saw him, how happy he looked. "It is all right!" he said, his old, wrinkled face smiling all over. "Jesus said: 'Him that comes I'll on no account turn off;' and I came to Jesus, and He won't turn me off, I am sure!"

"You will be the first He has ever cast out, if He does!" we said.

"Now," said the old man, "I've a favour to ask you; I want you to write them words out very big and plain, and nail them to the bottom of my bed, where I can see them, and then, when Satan comes and makes me afraid, I can just point to them and say: 'There, Satan! My Lord says that, and I believe it!' I think that Satan will go away then."

So the next week we brought a big text and fastened it to the old man's bed, and I cannot tell you how pleased he was!

That dear old man is dead now, and proving the truth of his favourite text. He died the next year, in the autumn, when the swallows were flying away to warmer countries, and the ground was strewn with dead leaves. I saw him on the last conscious day he spent on earth. He put his poor, cold hand on mine, and whispered with oh! such a glad smile: "'Him that comes I'll on no account turn off.' My blessed Lord said it. I am going to Him, to one of the many mansions He prepares for them as loves Him!" When I came to the house again, the old man was "gone home."

Children, how many of you could write truthfully under this story: "I came to Jesus, as this old man did, and He did not turn me out"?

A CALL TO PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

IN many respects the present condition of things in Ireland appears to demand the earnest and united prayers of all Christian people. In the first place, there is that wide-spread spiritual darkness and ignorance of Christ's Gospel which is at the root of every evil, and, in the removal of which, by the penetrating beams of the Light of the World, consists our only hope of lasting good.

Then we have the terrible fact of long-continued agricultural and commercial depression, with its far-reaching effects brought home so painfully to all classes of the community, and involving sharp pecuniary trial and strain to many even of the Lord's people. Along with depression, there is the prevalent agrarian crime and disorder, with lawless combinations infringing the rights and liberties, if not endangering the lives and properties, of large numbers of peace-loving subjects, with which successive Governments seem powerless to grapple.

And now, in addition to these sources of anxiety, there comes the political crisis in the kingdom, with a result which causes to all thoughtful persons grave apprehension, certainly of difficulties, and possibly of danger to Ireland in the coming year.

These are public matters patent to all, but when we turn to the state of the Church of Christ, and to our individual walk, how much there is to mourn and to confess! What want of harmony and love among Christians! What well-kept barriers, what neglected openings to unity! What slackness in the work of rescuing souls from sin here, and hell hereafter! What zeal for worldly gain, what pride and selfishness! What sins of word, of act, of thought! All this and much more of self-condemnation must be on the consciences of thousands with a loud, prophetic summons to repentance and humiliation, even to the dust before our God.—(See Nehemiah i. 4—11.)

It may be that God has a purpose of mercy ready to fulfil in the spiritual enfranchisement of this land; or perhaps He would use means for the better dispersion of his Gospel throughout the world (Acts viii. 4), or possibly the coming of the Lord is nigh at hand. In any case we may surely take the present shaking of "things that are made" as our Father's discipline to separate our hearts from earthly things, so that we, receiving a kingdom that cannot be moved, may have grace to serve Him acceptably (Heb. xii. 26—29) with a ready acquiescence in his will, whatever it may be.

Shall we not, then agree together, whether as individuals, in families, or in meetings specially gathered for the purpose, to make our confession before the Throne of Grace, and pray for the restoration of prosperity in this land, for the spread of the knowledge of Christ among its people, and for the sustaining help and deliverance of all who are in circumstances of trial.

It is suggested that, in addition to the usual times of prayer, a special occasion should be found each day for thus presenting these, our petitions, before God. And He, who has bidden us to cast all our anxiety on Him, and in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, to make our requests known unto Him, has promised that the peace of God shall guard our hearts in Christ Jesus.

MR. TOYE'S ORPHAN HOME.

WE thankfully record that the illness which caused Mr. Toye's Thanksgiving meeting to be postponed has quite disappeared; his annual meeting took place the other evening at the Home in Lewisham-road. His family at present consists of 138 boys and girls, and he was thankful to report a fact which may make him envied by many whose families are very much smaller—he has not had one on the sick list for the last twenty months, though he has been very ill himself. At one time he almost despaired of life, and he was very much troubled about the future of the Home. He said he asked the Lord to let him know if the sickness was to be unto death. "Thou shalt not die but live" came to him as the reply; and with it came such quietness, and peace, and freedom from anxiety that he soon recovered.

Mr. Toye has not yet broken his rule never to ask any human being for anything for his children or himself, and a faithful God has never allowed them to go without a meal. But sometimes the enemy tried very hard to disturb his faith. This was the case, for instance, on December 15, for there was no oatmeal in the bin, and the fund was low—rather, there was none at all. But the breakfast came in. The question then was, What about the dinner? Well, in the forenoon a large basket of fish arrived, which dined them well. Still the trouble remained about the tea-table; but before tea came a letter from Islington, containing four guineas, and later on a friend called and asked him to accept ten pounds. "It is a grand thing," said Mr. Toye, with a radiant face, "to have to do with a living God."

There were many friends present who led the meeting in praise and prayer. There was one who said that if Christians would endeavour to get rid of their sense of proprietorship in their children, and think of them all as God's children, what an amount of trouble would be saved in the world. He had known Christian parents who, for some slight, real or imagined, offered to their children, had broken up life-long friendships. But their complaisance would not have been disturbed had they seen the slight offered to the children of another. That is what happens when "my children" are always first considered. It is the feeling natural to a bear robbed of her young, but surely not to men and women with the grace of God in their hearts. When he saw in the paper that 7000 dogs had been taken up in one week by the police, without being hard-hearted he said he was glad, for it seemed as if a chance had opened for 7000 orphan children finding a home. It was a terrible thing to see Christians lavish their love on four-footed creatures, when they could have instead dear little babes, made after the image of God, and destined to immortality. This was a truth which had to be proclaimed tenderly but faithfully to the Christian Church.

The visitors before separating had an opportunity of inspecting the Home, and we should not be surprised if the look in at "the stores" caused considerable additions during Christmas week.

DOWN LODGE HALL, WANDSWORTH.—In a report of the first year's work in this hall, which stands on the site of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Wandsworth Hall, the Committee say, during the year, mission services have been held in the hall on Sundays, afternoon and evening, also meetings and Bible-classes in the evenings of other days; many of the services being largely attended, chiefly by the working classes and their families. Special evangelistic addresses have, from time to time, been given in the hall with encouraging results. Other distinctive meetings have also been held, at all of which earnest Gospel addresses were delivered. As the influence of the mission develops, and the area of the work extends, there will be an increased need of funds, which will be thankfully received by Mr. W. M. Seaman, Tower House, Putney; Mr. Clement F. Davis, Earlsfield, Wandsworth-Common, S W., members of the Committee.

MRS. MUMFORD IN BULGARIA.

THE following extracts from a letter received from this heroic woman, dated December 16, will be read with the deepest interest:—

"I find myself unexpectedly here (at Sophia), in cold weather, in hospital among wounded soldiers. It seems to be my lot to get into such places. And, although I would not cut off a chicken's head for a great deal, I can assist a surgeon to cut off legs or take out eyes without wincing. Indeed, I myself took out a bullet from a woman's back in the other war. She was in my hospital.

"The Government has a very sensible as well as economical way of dealing with its wounded; the slightly wounded are sent home to recover, after receiving first attention and advice as to how to proceed with their wounds. Sophia is consequently almost emptied of wounded. Dr. Matencheff (one of my boys who was educated in America) says there is not a thousand left in the city.

"I wish to tell you how my soldier, who telegraphed for me, was given back to life when all the doctors had given him up. A very skilful surgeon from Berlin came to see him and passed the same opinion: 'Peritonitis from gunshot wound in the bowels is fatal.' I had not felt so deeply since I went to my wounded husband, and my soldier boy had all the symptoms of approaching death. That day was one of anguish for us; no medicine helped, the doctors powerless, my brave boy, strong and vigorous, desired to live. He gave up all hope from earthly sources, and begged me to pray to God to save him. He at first prayed for forgiveness for all his sins and promised to be the Lord's, from this time on to serve Him faithfully. The disease had attacked the lungs, and the pain was so great and so constant that he could hardly keep quiet enough to listen to my prayer in his behalf, which was very brief, but to the point—that if the Lord saw that he would live for Him, and other souls, then let the disease be removed and his sufferings cease? The answer was as if the Lord had taken him by the hand, as He did Peter's mother-in-law. It was not five minutes before he became quiet and went to sleep. The swelling subsided, and, by the time the doctor made his morning round, my brave soldier boy was on the road to life and health. I give him now no medicine, and he continues to improve without any drawback.

"The Bulgarians need money to buy wood for the hospitals, for here it is dreadfully cold. I wish to take our soldier home with me, if I can get the money to do so. The brave private soldiers, who so willingly jeopardise their lives for love of country, and religious and political freedom, receive only one shilling per month pay. Officers, of course, receive more."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. E. P. TELFORD has lately concluded a five weeks' mission in Dewsbury which has been attended with much blessing.

MR. JOHN HARRIS has closed a three weeks' mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Hockley. The meetings have been well attended and much good has been done.

THE CHURCH ARMY is about to be introduced into Australia, and two officers will leave England in February. Prolonged army missions have been begun at Wallingford and Cambridge, and others will shortly commence at Keighley and Newcastle.

CANTERBURY.—A five days' evangelistic mission has been held at the Baptist Chapel, St. George's-place; Rev. C. B. Sawday, of Vernon Chapel, King's-cross, preached every evening, and Rev. W. Pattman, of Herne-bay, sang sacred solos. The meeting was well attended and "the word was with power." Many were deeply impressed, and several professed to find the Saviour. The friends are hoping to gather in a goodly number as the result of the services.

A SERIOUS DANGER.

By HENRY VARLEY.

A GREAT danger threatens. A large number of persons are quietly assuming that because the abduction case of Eliza Armstrong broke down, therefore there is no truth in the fearful statements which appeared from the pen of Mr. Stead in the columns of The Pall Mall Gazette.

Let it be distinctly remembered that the Lords' Committee, which sat for ten months to investigate this whole question in 1881-2, declared that the mass of evidence which was brought before them proved the existence of a widespread and fearful system of slavery, which "surpassed in arrant villainy and rascality any other trade in human beings in any part of the world in ancient or modern times." This was the language used by Lord Dalhousie. Lord Shaftesbury also, who was another member of that committee, wrote of this traffic in the bodies and souls of British girls, that "anything more horrible or anything approaching the wickedness and cruelty perpetrated in these dens of infamy in Brussels, it was impossible to imagine."

These statements were made three years, at least, before Mr. Stead's revelations appeared, and certainly it will stand as a lasting disgrace to the late Government that, knowing this dreadful traffic was in full blast in 1881-2, no energetic or effectual steps were taken to save these thousands of Her Majesty's most defenceless subjects.

This traffic has been known by the police to have existed for more than twenty years. One mode of operation adopted by these villainous procurers has been to advertise in our London and provincial papers, in such terms as the following: "Wanted three young ladies for a house of business in Brussels." "As book-keeper in a large and first-class Continental hotel." "An accomplished English governess wanted in a French family." "Two superior upper-class servants wanted in a French (or Belgian) city." "Two young ladies required in a first-class house of business in Brussels," "Comfortable homes," "first-class situations," and "liberal remuneration" being promised.

In such deceitful, ensnaring traps, and by such methods of shameful misrepresentation, numbers of our English sisters are still exported into foreign dens of infamy from which they never have a chance of escape. The doors of these houses are fitted on purpose to allow of easy ingress, but they are fastened on the inside. The truth is, the victims were actually bought and paid for, and became abject slaves in a far more horrible bondage than ever existed in the Southern States of America. Now, until the Criminal Law Amendment Act passed in July of this year, no protection for our British girls and women existed.

What the facts disclosed in evidence before the Lords' Committee were may be gathered from the first of a series of ten recommendations which the Committee presented to the Home Secretary as the basis of the C.L.A. Act: "That it be made a serious misdemeanour for any person to solicit or endeavour to procure any woman to leave the United Kingdom, or to leave her usual place of abode in the United Kingdom, for the purpose of entering a brothel or prostituting herself in parts beyond the seas, whether he shall or shall not inform the woman of such purpose."

The drastic character of these words, aimed against these atrocious procurers, conclusively proves that more than three years before Mr. Stead wrote the articles which some so loudly condemn, the Lords' Committee had spoken in the strongest terms. To me the astonishment is not that Mr. Stead wrote as he did, but that the Legislature by its criminal indifference became guilty of tacit complicity with the fearful wrongs committed against thousands of their countrywomen.

Well might Mr. Stead implore those whose hands are still free, not to allow his errors, his failures, or his imprisonment, to turn the workers aside from their holy battle for the freedom of these English slaves. Prudery, that ill-favoured matron, is busy seeking to silence the men and women who believe that "whatsoever maketh manifest is light," and that "the hidden workers of darkness" dread nothing so much as the light of truth and of the day. "The workers of iniquity hide themselves," and alas! alas! many Christian people aid them in their criminal and vicious hiding.

Let those who have believed the non-existence of these crimes carefully study the appalling facts which follow:—The London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has lately issued a report (October) which contains a list of ninety-three cases of attack upon maidens and children, forty-seven of which were actually committed upon little girls under ten years of age. This list represents crimes committed during a part of the months of August and September, 1885. The Secretary says they have no means of getting at the actual number, but thinks the reported cases are probably not a tithe of the crimes which have been committed. Let us, however, suppose the reported cases to represent one-fourth of the total. It will thus be seen that the list represents less than two months' crime, committed, be it remembered, in August and September of this year. A little calculation will show that, if the same rate obtained, more than two thousand five hundred horrible crimes have been committed, and the same number of girls have been outraged, dishonoured, and brought to shame, in the United Kingdom, during the past twelve months.

I have actually heard the statement made that these crimes have been produced by the writings in The Pall Mall Gazette. Let those who say so carefully note this: The same society issued a similar list which comprehended eight weeks, commencing June 1 and ending July 25. This list contained nearly fifty cases of outrage, many of which were committed before the revelations appeared or the Criminal Law Amendment Act was passed.

I know something of the strong pressure which has been and is being brought to bear upon the Christian press and upon Christian men and women to be silent concerning these things. Let me ask your readers to remember the searching words of our Lord, "If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it?" (Proverbs xxiv. 11, 12). Nay, was it not for the refusal to aid in the deliverance of the Israelitish maidens from the rapine of Sisera and his hosts, that the tremendous words were uttered, "Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty" (Judges v. 23, 24, 30)?

THE DAY AFTER ARMAGEDDON.

By Dr. HORATIUS BONAR.

"They have blown the trumpet . . . but none goeth to the battle."—Ezek. vii. 14.

'TIS the summons to battle,
But the cry is unheard;
The trumpet has spoken,
Not a warrior has stirred.

Hark! the summons to battle!
It has sounded again!
Still louder and keener!
It has sounded in vain.

Yet a third time, and shriller,
That war note has blown;
But the answer that cometh
Is the echo alone.

'Tis the silence of silence;
Tower, tent, vale, and hill,
Field, forest, and highway,
Are all noiseless and still.

No challenge is lifted,
No signal unfurled:
'Tis man's dark hour of terror—
The awe of the world.

For the arm of Jehovah
Has been bared in its might,
And the sword of his vengeance
Has been burnished to smite.

Through the ridges of battle
His ploughshare has sped,
And the tents of the living
Are the tombs of the dead.

The rude roar of millions
Has been hushed in an hour,
The array of the mighty
Is crushed in its power.

'Twas man's proudest muster
Of sinew and steel;
His army of armies,
Mail-clad to the heel.

No sun had e'er dawned
On so fearful a day;
No trumpet had marshalled
So dread an array.

As if earth in her frenzy,
From each region afar,
Had poured forth her nations
For the shock of that war.

In the flush of their manhood,
In the bud of their prime,
In veteran ripeness,
The men of each clime

Come thronging and rushing,
Like rivers in flood,
Defying the terrors
And vengeance of God.

For the ruler of darkness,
The god of this world,
Had summoned his armies,
His banner unfurled.

As the stormcloud it gathered,
As the lightning it sped;
As the mist it has vanished;
All is still as the dead.

Like the desert at midnight:
Not a breath nor a beam:
'Tis the silence of silence:
The dream of a dream!

Now, chains for the spoiler!
Dark and swift be his doom!
Thou hast trodden the nations;
Thy treading is come!

Earth, cease now thy wailing!
Thy wounds bleed no more.
Lo, the curse is departing!
Thy sorrows are o'er.

Rise, daughter of Judah!
Awake now and sing!
It has come—the glad kingdom!
He has come—the great King!

Thy long night is ending
Of sorrow and wrong:
For shame there is glory;
For weeping a song.

The new morn is dawning!
Bursts forth the new sun!
The new verdure is smiling!
The new age is begun!

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Jan. 3, John i. 29—39; Jan. 4, i. 40—51; Jan 5, ii. 1—12; Jan. 6, ii. 13—25; Jan. 7, iii. 1—13; Jan. 8, iii. 14—24; Jan. 9, iii. 25—36.

MARSEILLES STRANGERS' RESTS.—The two Rests at 71, Rue de la Darse, and 64, Quai du Port, under the direction of Mr. C. E. Faithful, continue to afford shelter to sailors of all nationalities, and as far as possible to passing foreigners also. A deficiency in the funds has caused much anxiety. Nearly a thousand persons have lodged in the Rests during the year, the "bags" with Bibles and tracts, &c., have done good service, the men have been protected from perils, and spiritual benefits have been conferred on many.

BLIND PENSION SOCIETY.—During the past year pensions have been given to 460 persons. Only those of good character are helped. The income of the society has been well maintained, over £6000 being received; fifty-seven pensioners have been added, several churches have contributed for the first time, and success has been achieved altogether beyond former years. Nearly 200 candidates, however, are still waiting for help, and fresh applications come in every week, which can only be entertained when more funds are provided. The office is 235, Southwark-bridge-road, S.E., and the Hon. Sec. is Mr. Thomas Pocock.

A PLEA FOR OUR BOYS.

By JAMES B. WOOKEY.

A FEW years ago it was my painful privilege to go over a large convict prison. I am never likely to forget the sad sights I saw, or the terrible tales I was told; but just before I came out, I said to one of the officials, "I would willingly sacrifice my liberty, and live on prison food, and wear a convict's dress, if I could be permitted to spend my evenings with them, to talk to them about their souls, and tell them of a dear Saviour's love. His answer was, "No; this, Mr. Wookey, is impossible; but I can tell you what you may do—go out and try and stop any more from coming in."

Since then I have knelt by the bedside of some young men who have never been to prison, but have been dying as the direct result of a licentious life, and as I have heard their bitter cry of anguish when going down to the chambers of death (Prov. vii. 27), "Oh that somebody had told me before!" and when the poor body has been lying in its coffin, I have cried to our loving God that He would open the way for us to sound an alarm in the ears of parents, employers, ministers, &c., about the damning sins that surround us on every hand.

I can but thank Him that in answer to this prayer we have been enabled to do a little during the past twelve months. My object in writing now is to make an appeal to parents and employers through your columns for the better protection of boys and youths. The following cases will speak for themselves:—

Shop in London; 16 employés, 9 of whom are apprentices. Master, prominent member of a chapel, drives there in his brougham every Sunday. Lives away from the business. Youth goes there as an indoor apprentice, comparatively innocent. Before he leaves has contracted a disease, through sin, which will last him through life. Is converted now. At this place card-playing, drinking, and filthy conversation go on half the night. Parents suppose it to be a respectable place. Not one pure man living in it; foreman worst of them all.

Large firm in London; owner an Alderman; between twenty and thirty young men in the house. Young fellow, who only remained there six weeks, described it as a perfect hell.

A youth, not converted, but of unimpeachable character, son of God-fearing parents (Friends), came to a large wholesale warehouse in London, and it took but two short years to ruin him for life. It is to be feared his parents will see him no more. Another lad, but fifteen years of age, went from a pure home and godly parents to be an apprentice to a gentleman known to be a thoroughly God-fearing man. The Bible was read every morning; but the assistants had a private sitting-room to themselves. The first thing they did when they found this innocent youth in their midst, was to speak such things as cannot be repeated here, until he buried his head in his hands and burst into tears, begging them to desist. Soon after the eldest apprentice came and told him it was no use his holding out any longer, for when he himself came first, and was the youngest apprentice, he was just the same as he, but he soon got like the rest. Our young friend, however, was enabled by the grace of God to hold out, and the consequence is that the tone of the place is much improved. You may ask why this lad did not tell his master. One reason was the foolish feeling that is engendered in public schools against "splitting" under any circumstances. Another was the probability of the master not believing him.

Now we have reason to believe that there are thousands of youths who have been piously brought up, and have been handed over to employers by their parents to learn an honest trade, who, instead of learning it, are being taught the way to hell. Oh, surely God will not hold the employer guiltless who makes no adequate effort to shield the young under his roof from becoming the victims of those who hold the doctrine of devils, that vice is a necessity. Where possible it would be an incalculable blessing for a master to get any young hands he may employ alone sometimes, and ask them if they are happy, and give them a few words of solemn advice. Surely God expects more of a Christian employer than that he should just read a few verses of Scripture to his apprentices.

Of parents I would ask, is it not criminal on your part to send a youth to a strange town, to perhaps his first situation, without any knowledge of the character of the five or six young men who may occupy the same room as himself. You are most anxious about the reputation of the head of the firm, who will have the least to do with your son. Then, again, instead of impressing on your boy the necessity of sticking to his situation—although it might be strange at first, he will soon get used to it—would it not be much wiser to acquaint him with the awful fact that there are men in the devil's service, moving about in all positions in life, who do their best to make others like themselves; and tell your son plainly, if, in his situation, he finds himself thrown amongst such men to write or come to you at once.

I would strongly urge parents to let their sons know from their own lips the consequences of sin. Let them know that there is only one infallible safeguard from sin, and that is neither reading nor praying nor making up the mind to be better than most people, but real change of heart brought about by accepting Christ as their personal Saviour; then if they are called to go through a lion's den or fiery furnace they will not be alone, for has He not promised to keep the feet of his saints?

In conclusion, I would only add that in my judgment the best way to protect the girl is to save the boy, for is not the great black army of fallen women due to the terrible fact that there is a far greater and blacker army of fallen men, whose hellish demand has created the supply? Then, in God's name, do something to protect the lads, and that quickly.

A PURITY CRUSADE IN NAPLES.

IF ever a movement needed the prayerful sympathy of Christians, the crusade just entered on in this city does. We are but a little band among so many agents of the devil, who swarm on the decks of our ships and are constantly prowling about the streets like evil beasts, seeking the moral ruin of our young men.

We are corresponding with the magistrates of Naples, in the name of the Christian Purity League, to suppress the sale of evil pictures and other social crimes too gross to put in writing. The special tracts have done great good in causing officers of ships, and seamen, too, to join the league and watch the traffic in their ships. We have sufficient information to say that Naples is a chief centre of this evil, and anything done towards suppressing it here will benefit the world.

Although we have much opposition, yet the Lord is with us, and steady progress is being made. At Messina a new Sailors' Rest is secured with comfortable rooms, and one for Mr. Ellery, the missionary colporteur. This brother had a good training in Mr. Spurgeon's Colportage Society, and Mr. Guinness's Training College. The Sailors' Rests ashore are very necessary, and also suitable persons to guide the young men to them. There are many ports where there are neither Sailors' Rests nor kind Christian hearts to care for our seamen and young men. Pray that every port may be supplied with safe refuges.

TABEETHA MISSION, JAFFA.—This report by Miss Walker-Arnot contains a simple narrative of the condition and working of her excellent mission for the past year. The details relating to the general management and training adopted in the schools will be of interest to many. Equally interesting is it to trace the intense desire of the workers for the spiritual good of the pupils. There are now fifty girls resident in the Home, and about a hundred attend the out-schools. The committee suggest that many of the churches might raise £10 yearly to maintain a child in the home. The loss sustained through the death of Miss Mangan, Superintendent of the Medical Mission, is regretfully announced.

MIDNIGHT, 1885.

O FATHER of our spirits,
 The year is dying fast,
We worship and we bless Thee
 For all thy mercies past.
Thou God of our salvation—
 Our Maker and our Friend—
We would in adoration
 The fleeting moments spend.

On every waiting spirit
 Thy sacred unction pour,
And teach some heart to praise Thee
 Which never praised before.
Regard our sad confession,
 Though breathed to Thee alone;
And pardon our transgression,
 And seal us as thine own.

If any weary-hearted
 Are groping for the light,
We pray Thee, gracious Saviour,
 Reveal Thyself to-night;
Thy matchless grace receiving,
 May we its fulness know,
And to the promise cleaving,
 Find Heaven begun below.

O infinite Redeemer,
 Our all in all art Thou;
Here in the solemn midnight
 At thy dear feet we bow.
In thy great Name confiding,
 We will not yield to fear;
And, in thy love abiding,
 We hail the glad New Year.

A GRAVE CHARGE.

SIR,—Your correspondent "Less than the Least," in his letter published to-day in The Christian, brings a charge of gross and systematic immorality against the "commanders" of the British army and navy abroad. I will not repeat the terms of the charge, lest further publicity might be given to a grievous libel. Denial, however, is challenged, and this I beg leave to offer most emphatically. I write with the experience of nearly twenty-eight years' service, at home and abroad, in peace and in war.

Your correspondent requires proof if his allegation should be denied. Surely, it is rather for him to give proof of the assertion made; else I might as lightly lay a charge of some specific act of immorality against himself, and allow his character, meanwhile, to suffer until he brought forward proof of innocence. It is almost inconceivable that any person of ordinary sense and observation could honestly believe that such a charge as has been made is really true. But the ignorance of many persons on these subjects is so widespread, and the injustice of this particular allegation so gross, that I trust you will be good enough to publish this letter, so that at least the many Christian soldiers and sailors who read your paper may see that one of themselves, at all events, would strive to undo the evil already done.—Yours faithfully,

London, December 23. H. G. M.

ROYAL HOMES.—We have received the tenth report of these Homes for ladies with limited income. Since the commencement, fifty-five ladies have participated in their benefits. They consist of four houses situated in the vicinity of Wandsworth-common, and require about £900 yearly. Last year another branch Home was opened through the generosity of some friends, who have taken the entire responsibility of it for five years; thus seven other poor ladies were provided for, raising the total number of inmates to thirty-five. Copies of the report may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Mrs. E. L. Jacob, 8, Altenburg-gardens, Clapham Common, S.W.

PEACE PRINCIPLES IN NORTH EUROPE.—One of the foreign colleagues of the English Peace Society, M. Frederick Bajer, informs that body that, as a Member of the Danish Parliament, he intends to bring forward a motion for appointing a Legislative Commission to consider the desirability of a treaty between the three Scandinavian kingdoms of Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, to establish the principle of arbitration as the permanent future basis for the settlement of any disputes which may hereafter arise between their respective Governments.

THE LATE JOSEPH LIVESEY.

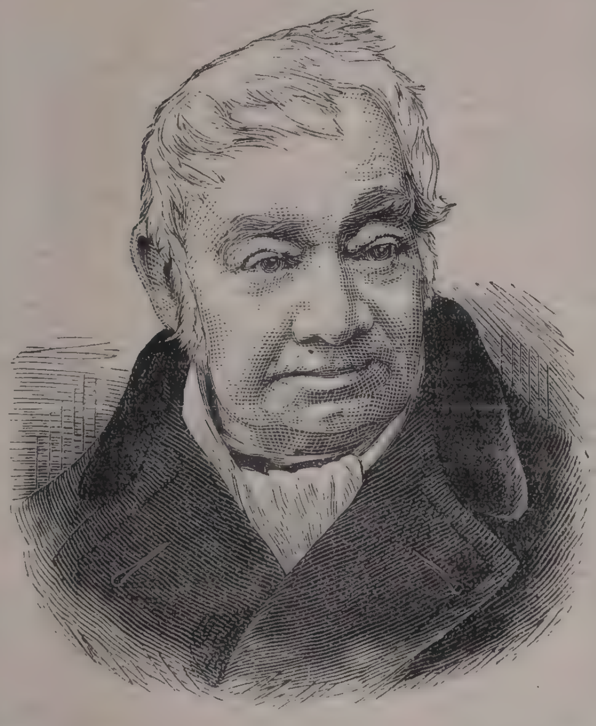
MUCH of the abuse that attends the Christmas and New Year festivals is associated with and arises from indulgence in strong drink. It is, therefore, fitting that at this season we should call attention to the recently published life of Joseph Livesey,* the renowned Temperance pioneer and reformer, who died about a year ago at the advanced age of ninety. The work is more of a compilation than a biography of the ordinary type, but we are not sure that its value is any the less on that score. It may not be altogether as easy reading, but the facts it contains, relating to Mr. Livesey's life and work, and also to the history of the Temperance movement, deserve to be well studied by every labourer in the cause.

The most fascinating part of the volume is the "Autobiography," a plain and modest statement withal, but full of the most impressive interest and encouragement for all reformers, and specially for young men in the humbler walks of life. One short extract will show its quality:—

"I never regretted that poverty was my early lot, and that I was left to make my own way in the world. It was here, I believe, I learned to feel for the poor, to acquire the first lessons of humanity, and to cultivate my own energies as the best means (in my case the only means) of self-advancement. Up to this time I had had little schooling, only about sufficient to read the Testament, and write, and count a little. This cellar was my college, the 'breast-beam' was my desk, and I was my own tutor. Many a day and night have I laboured to understand Lindley Murray, and at last, by indomitable perseverance, what long appeared a hopeless task was accomplished without aid from any human being. Anxious for information, and having no companions from whom I could learn anything, I longed for books, but had no means with which to procure them. There was no public library, and publications of all kinds were expensive; and, if I could succeed in borrowing one, I would devour it like a hungry man would his first meal. Indeed, few of our young men can have any idea of the contrast betwixt the present and the past, as to the advantages of gaining knowledge. At the period I refer to there were no national schools, no Sunday-schools, no mechanics' institutions, no penny publications, no cheap newspapers, no free libraries, no penny postage, no Temperance societies, no tea parties, no Y.M.C.A.'s, no people's parks, no railways, no gas, no anything in fact that distinguishes the present time, in favour of the improvement and enjoyment of the masses. Most of the articles of necessity for a poor man's home, during the war with France, were nearly double their present price, and all felt the pressure of the times. My only pocket money, when a lad, was 'the Sunday penny;' and I have a distinct recollection how proud I felt when I went among my companions on the Sunday afternoon with threepence in my pocket, which was my increased weekly allowance.

"In a few years after I was tasked to do so much, and all that I could earn over I was allowed for myself. It was then I got my grammar, exercises, and key, Cann's Bible with references, and a few other books, as my means would allow. I seldom got a meal without a book open before me at the same time, and I managed to do what I have never seen any other weaver attempt—to read and weave at the same time. For hours together I have done this, and without making bad work. The book was laid on the breast-beam, with a cord slipped on to keep the leaves from rising. Head, hands, and feet, all busy at the same time! I had a restless mind, panting for knowledge, and incapable of inaction; and I remember that sometimes—there being nothing else that I could see out of my window—I counted the number of people that passed in an hour, distinguishing males from females. The parts of the loom and the wall nearest my seat were covered with marks, which I had made to assist me to remember certain facts, and these hieroglyphics were there when I left. This cellar is only a short walk from where I am now writing, and I feel a pleasure in making a call at this hallowed spot. The privations connected with poverty, in my case, admitted of no exceptions. The day seemed too short for my love of reading, and as often as I could, I remained to read after uncle and grandfather had retired to bed; but I was allowed no candle, and for hours I have read by the glare of a few embers left in the fire-grate, with my head close to the bars. It was a fault I had then, and which has continued with me through life, to skim over a book. If I took one up I seldom felt content to lay it down till I had reached the last page. Looking back sixty years, I cannot help constantly exclaiming, 'What a contrast there is betwixt the present advantages of poor people and their children compared to that period!' And, I may add, 'How little do the wealthy really know of the suffering and adversities of those who all their lives have to toil for their daily bread!'"

Mr. Pearce's introduction is excellent, as giving a clear conception of the remarkable activity and catholic spirit of Mr. Livesey. He was evidently a man far in advance of his generation in many matters. The following extracts indicate the character of his views, which must have seemed very radical, if not revolutionary, half a century ago:—



"Livesey would be asked, 'What do you propose as a substitute for the methods you dissent from as being anti-Christian?' He fully answers such an inquiry, and unfolds a legitimate plan of action, which will well repay the attentive study of all persons desirous of spiritually enlightening the masses. He says:—

"'What plan would you then suggest,' it will be asked, 'in order to conform to the primitive standard?' I answer, let the simple plan mentioned in the New Testament be adopted. It is not necessary, and far from being proper, in my opinion, that buildings should be shut up all the week which might be used for a variety of useful purposes. The foolish and superstitious notion of one place being holier than another should long since have been exploded. There is no more holiness in a church or a chapel than there is in a garret or a barn, and every room in which Christians meet on the Lord's day might be turned to some useful purpose as a school, a lecture-room, or a workshop. Secondly, it is not too much to expect, when persons are freed from ecclesiastical exactions, that individuals would frequently be found able and willing to provide a place and give the use of it for Sundays; but should this not be the case, let a place be rented. And instead of having one fine building in a respectable neighbourhood, it would be better to have several places in poor neighbourhoods, which would correspond with the 'upper rooms' named in Scripture, and which ought to be used for schools or other useful purposes. And if the meetings were conducted with more simplicity and less affectation, without any pew rents or collections, there would be a great increase of that class which constantly followed Jesus—I mean the poor. Such places should invariably be rented; and, supposing that in some cases no place could be met with, there would not be much difficulty in occasionally inducing persons of property to build, upon an assurance that rent would be paid. Any plan, in fact, is to be preferred to the 'Church property' plan. To show that all anticipated difficulties could be met, I may mention, that though the Temperance societies, with about two exceptions in the kingdom, have no property of their own, I believe there is scarcely a town or a village where the friends do not manage to hold their meetings. Happily they have not as yet much 'property' to contend about, and I have no hesitation in giving it as my opinion, taking a full view of the matter, that their usefulness is likely to diminish as they become anxious to possess it. And why should not this plan be acted upon in reference to religion? There would then not only be nothing for the members of a congregation to contend for, but their resources would be available for better purposes, and piety and goodness would then visit the houses of our populous towns, instead of being almost confined, as at present, to consecrated buildings. As to endowments, the bare mention of them cannot fail to arouse, in the minds of those who have observed their tendency, a thorough conviction of their decidedly pernicious influence upon the interests of religion. The benevolent work of instructing the ignorant should, in all cases, be done gratuitously. 'Freely ye have received, freely GIVE;' and should any Christian teacher be required to labour, in the primitive import of the term, by travelling about, if he be deserving, he will get his 'hire' from the spontaneous feelings of his Christian brethren, without either pew rents, endowments, or any kind of tax whatsoever.'"

THEORY AND PRACTICE.

"The following striking illustration of Mr. Livesey's method of reducing these theories to practice was published at the time of his death by The Preston Chronicle:

"In connection with Mr. Livesey's early preaching we give an incident, because it is illustrative of one of the special features of his character:—Long ago, the land upon which St. James's Church is erected, with the streets on east and west side of it, was a grass-grown field, and on the west side were a number of small gardens, which were cultivated by tradesmen of the town, for in those days they did not live on the high pressure plans of the present day, and they found time to enjoy the beauties of nature, and luxuriate amidst her choicest floral gifts. Amongst others who had one of the numerous garden allotments was the deceased. One Sunday evening, nearly sixty years ago, Mr. Livesey was walking in his garden, with some of his children, when a messenger came running across the field; he came from Vauxhall-road Chapel, and rushing into the garden, out of breath, exclaimed, 'Oh, Mr. Livesey, they are waiting for you.' 'Who?' replied he. And the rejoinder to this was, 'The people assembled in the chapel. You promised the minister to preach when he went away.' 'Yes, I did,' said he, 'but he was to tell me when I was required, and I have had no intimation whatever that he had gone away; but if the people are waiting, I must go.' He hastened across the field, with the messenger, and, on entering the chapel, the latter was conducting him to the foot of the stairs leading to the pulpit, but Mr. Livesey stopped short, and went into a large square singing pew, under and immediately in front of the pulpit. The messenger fetched down the Bible, and cushion on which it rested, with the couple of tassels which it was the fashion in those days to attach to it, so that they hung down in front of the pulpit. The messenger adjusted the cushion and the Bible on the desk, in the singing pew, when Mr. Livesey, taking a look at the tasselled cushion, removed it, and, placing it on the seat he was about to occupy, sat down upon it, then commenced the service, and preached a sermon fully the usual length."

The book is adorned with three portraits of Mr. Livesey, one of which we reproduce.

Notes and Comments.

In our next issue we will give a portrait of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, and some extracts from his last volume of "The Treasury of David."

The Christmas season was observed as usual in many parts of the Metropolis and also in the provincial towns by the distribution of "good cheer," coupled with the preaching of "good tidings of great joy" to the poor. We regret we have not space for reports of these numerous gatherings.

Our readers will rejoice with us at the revived spiritual interest awakened in the great city of New York in connection with the special evangelistic mission in the Episcopal churches, referred to at length on a succeeding page. The ten days' mission to young men in Brooklyn being held almost simultaneously by Messrs. Moody and Sankey will, we trust, fan the flame and make this month of December memorable in the religious annals of the American commercial capital.

It is told of Dannecker, a great German sculptor, whose work ranks with the noblest triumphs of art, that after he had executed a pathetic figure of Jesus of Nazareth he invariably declined the commissions of Napoleon and others for statues of the pagan deities. He felt that such work would be a sacrilege on the part of a man who had seen Christ. "My art is henceforth a consecrated thing," he said, simply and nobly.

This illustrates what consecration really ought to be: the employment in God's service of the talents and attainments previously devoted to less honourable work. There is no sphere of human labour or of human knowledge which may not be so ennobled. The man who has "seen Christ" will not be content with a bounded and limited vision of mortal things; and with consecration will come wider usefulness and freedom from that unrest which haunts the pursuit of all but the highest objects.

In these days of persevering and continuous Christian effort, it is helpful to remember that the highest life is that in which prayer, meditation, and work, each have their own proportionate place. The old monks missed their way by giving undue prominence to one; the modern worker is in danger of unduly exercising another. God has given us the privilege of labour, and it may be abused if it is permitted to take us, and keep us, from that other privilege of thoughtful communion with Him; just as the blessing of restful meditation may be made injurious to our spiritual life if we become so enervated in its indulgence as to fail to hear the Master's command, "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard." No one need be hurried either in his prayer, meditation, or work, for it may be taken as an axiom of the healthy spiritual life that God requires nothing from his children which they have not ample time to do.

> What, then, is the meaning of life—of life absolutely and inevitably bounded by death? To me it only seems intelligible as the avenue and vestibule to another life. . . . Shall we say that what passes from our sight passes into oblivion? No, not into oblivion. Far, far beyond our ken the eternal laws must hold their sway.

This passage is remarkable as forming part of the last chapter of Mr. Henry George's singular contribution to the study of Political Economy, "Progress and Poverty," a volume noteworthy, amongst other things, as being, perhaps, the first in which "the dismal science" has been treated in the light of immortality. It is by no means improbable that fewer of our toilers would have been alienated from the recognised forms of religion had the economic questions which bear upon the toils and privaotins of the labouring classes been more frequently discussed from such a point of view as that taken in the concluding pages of the much-debated book in question.

The doctrine of laissez faire is responsible for the existence of much of that unbelief in religion which seems to be spreading in our midst, for its propounders and supporters are bound to attribute to the action of inscrutable Divine laws the suffering and sorrow which follow inevitably from the application of economic principles, based only upon human selfishness and greed. Every attempt to deal with the science of Political Economy from a nobler stand-point than that usually taken by its professors and teachers is, therefore, to be hailed with pleasure; but a more potent result will follow if each Christian employer of labour will for himself look closely at his relations with those whom he employs, and decide solemnly how far they would bear being brought to the test under the standard of brotherhood in Christ.

It has been urged with striking force that, important as the antiquity of the canonical Gospels may be, the antiquity of their facts is of greater value. Questions as to the date of their composition come simply within the province of criticism, and if the opponents of Christianity were to succeed in shifting the date either forward or backward, they still would leave us the historical Christ, "who Himself is the Word." The Saviour, received by believing Christendom for over eighteen centuries, cannot be accounted for upon any clever mythical theory, He is the revelation of God the Father, and when we accept Him in his Divine fulness we may relegate literary questions concerning the written records respecting Him to their proper subordinate position.

C. F. D., writing recently to The Times on one aspect of Church reform, says:—

> Some few years ago a bishop's letter appeared in The Times, asking for lay help in the metropolitan part of his diocese. I wrote to him and offered my services as a lay preacher. Some letters passed between us, and the only reservation I made was that I should not be restricted in preaching in any part of the country where an opportunity offered without previously obtaining the consent of the vicar of the parish. To this the bishop objected, and my services were declined. Since that time I have delivered many hundreds of public addresses in agreement with the 6th, 9th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 15th, and 18th Articles of the Church of England, but, as the bishop declined my services, I offered them to, and they were accepted by, a well-known society which sends out evangelists. Many of the evangelists of this society are Church of England men; and several of my own addresses have been given in parish buildings in the Metropolis and the counties by the desire of the vicars of the parishes, and often with their presence on the platforms; but many of these clergymen were compelled to go to this society for the lay help they needed, and it was in several cases through this society that I assisted these vicars . . . It was the doctrine maintained by the above Articles which made such men as Whitfield, Wesley, Grimshaw, Romaine, Berridge, Venn, Fletcher, Hervey, Toplady, and others, such a power for good in the country during the revival of spiritual religion in the last century.

As a rider to his facts the writer appositely cites a passage from Lord Macaulay's Essay on Ranke's "History of the Popes," a perusal of which, he suggests, would be useful to many bishops and rectors. Macaulay says:—

> The Church of Rome thoroughly understands what no other Church has ever understood, how to deal with enthusiasts. In some sects, particularly in infant sects, enthusiaasm is suffered to be rampant. In other sects, particularly in sects long established and richly endowed, it is regarded with aversion. The Roman Catholic Church neither submits to enthusiasm nor proscribes it, but uses it. She considers it as a great moving force, which is neither good nor evil, but which may be so directed as to produce great good or great evil, and she assumes the direction to herself. She knows that a person in this state is no object of contempt. He may be vulgar, ignorant, visionary, extravagant, but he will do and suffer things which it is for her interest that somebody should do and suffer, yet from which calm and sober-minded men would shrink. She accordingly enlists him in her service, assigns to him some forlorn hope, in which intrepidity and impetuosity are more wanted than judgment and self-command, and sends him forth with her benediction and her applause.
> For a man thus minded, there is within the pale of the Establishment no place. He has been at no college, he cannot construe a Greek author or write a Latin theme, and is told that, if he remains in the communion of the Church he must do so as a hearer, and that if he is resolved to be a teacher, he must begin by being a schismatic. His choice is soon made. He harangues on Tower-hill or in Smithfield, a congregation is formed, a licence is obtained, a plain brick building, with a desk and benches, is run up and named Ebenezer or Bethel. In a few weeks the Church has lost for ever a hundred families, not one of which entertained the least scruple about her Articles, her religion, her liturgy, her government, or her ceremonies.
> Far different is the policy of Rome. The ignorant enthusiast whom the Anglican Church makes an enemy—and, whatever the polite and learned may think, a most dangerous enemy—the Catholic Church makes a champion. In this way the Church of Rome unites in herself all the strength of Establishment, and all the strength of Dissent. Even for female agency there is a place in her system. At Rome the Countess of Huntingdon would have a place in the calendar as St. Selina, and Mrs. Fry would be foundress and first Superior of the Blessed Order of Sisters of the Gaols. Place Ignatius Loyola at Oxford, he is certain to become the head of a formidable secession. Place John Wesley at Rome, he is certain to be the first general of a new society devoted to the interests and honour of the Church.

After all, to our thinking, it is better for the interest of the kingdom of God that the enthusiast should go his way, as Wesley did, than that he should be "used," after the Romish method, by any organisation. Perhaps it has been better for England and for the Church of Christ in England, and even for the Established Church of England, that Whitfield and Wesley and the Countess of Huntingdon were forced out of it, than that they should have been astutely manipulated within it. Enthusiasm so "used" is soon used up. Better one Wesley, or Whitfield, or Countess of Huntingdon, than a hundred of Francis Xavier or Ignatius Loyola.

We learn that parents, anxious about the salvation of their children, have in some cases taken lodgings near the place where Rev. E. P. Hammond is holding meetings. As this evangelist's engagements are now fixed for some months to come, any parents not living near the localities to be visited might adopt this plan; the Lord would surely honour their faith and their earnest desire to have their children brought into conscious, vital relationship with the Saviour. Many may be glad to know that Dr. Barnardo's Night and Day for December contains excellent portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Hammond, and a sketch of the services at the "Edinburgh Castle."

Give me (said Dr. Guthrie) these links: first, sense of need; second, desire to get; third, belief that, though He withhold for awhile, He loves to be asked; and fourth, belief that asking will obtain—give me these links, and the chain will reach from earth to heaven, bringing all heaven down to me, or bearing me up into heaven.

From some of the best of our benevolent institutions, the end of the year brings appeals which deplore the falling off of subscriptions by reason of general depression in trade and agriculture. At present there is little prospect of change. The matter should be on the hearts of God's people. We learn from Nehemiah and Daniel how faithful men identified themselves with their nation in times of special distress and visitation. And the God who is unchangeable showed Himself all through Old Testament history and prophecy as a correcting God; who condemned the irresolute dealing with vice, the "stumbling in judgment;" and who took away the delusive gilding that hid the intrinsic vanity of worldly things.

The Lord Jesus Christ, whose first coming we have been celebrating, confessed the world's sins. He stood before God as the incarnate conscience of the race, and said from his cross, "Thou art righteous in judging sin." The oneness of judgment with our Lord is a primary duty in public and private prayer, and especially as the New Year opens. Such united confession may not bring a sunshine of earthly prosperity, but it may open a way for what is better: our country may come to realise its dependence on God, purity and heavenly hope may come back to many when the eagerness for the fruition of this world no more agitates and engrosses.

One of the most important subjects for supplication is that which forms the substance of an able article in this month's Fortnightly Review. The writer declares himself to be a Hindoo. He admits that Hindooism is dissolving under the influence of Western ideas, but complains that the benefits the English Government is conferring upon India are material only, and that the tendency of things is to universal secularism. This question, which is one of the utmost gravity, can only be solved by the Church of Christ. Shall this age witness the fulfilment, on the widest scale, of "the house swept and garnished" and then taking to itself seven other spirits worse than the first?

This most serious subject of the future of our fellow-subjects in India may well form a theme for united prayer next week. India cannot "live by bread alone." Let prayer be made for Anglo-Indian society, which seems to many Hindoos to have no religious belief, and also that the stumbling-block of Protestant divisions in missionary work may be taken out of the way. A devoted servant of Christ lately deplored to us that in Southern India four parties existed. There were those who tried to walk in Christian love; the S P.G. agents; then some bigoted Lutherans; then some American Baptists. The three latter would have no fellowship with the former. What must the heathen think of this?

Many people say, or assume falsely, that we and other Christians have adopted in regard to the recent "revelations," the principle of doing evil that good may come. We have not known any Christian who has done so any more than ourselves. The following extract from The Friend may be accepted as expressing the views of Christians generally:—

> It has been said that outwardly we have had a great check, the enemy has gained a great victory. We fear this is true, and the sting of the temporary defeat of those who have been fighting long and earnestly in a most righteous struggle, consists in this: we are conscious that it was caused, not alone by imprudence, or by the infringements of any mere human laws, but by the infringement of Divine laws, by yielding to the temptation to "do evil that good might come" We cannot speak hardly of those who have thus erred. Many good and great men have done the same, and some are now honoured as the champions of our liberties. But none the less it is a fatal mistake, whatever may be the circumstances in which it is made, and mischief in one way or another always ensues. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal," and if, through our mismanagement, or impatience, or any other cause, they seem for the time ineffective, and we cast them aside to use those of the enemy, we may always expect such want of faith to bring us into danger, if not disaster.
> But it is not for us, who are little more than lookers on to read homilies to our friends who are in the thick of the fight, and who have suffered and risked so much in the conflict. Would that we all knew, without the shadow of a misgiving, that in working for God, the only sure road to victory, and the only safe one for the cause we have at heart, is to follow his steps who "did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth." Would that we could always put from us with "Get thee behind me, Satan," the insinuation that "the end justifies the means."

A lady correspondent makes an excellent suggestion—if it can be carried out. Speaking of the desirability of bringing young women of the upper strata of social life into closer contact with the children of the poor, she says:—

> Numbers of young ladies might find a most useful sphere in visiting our Board Schools, and taking a little of the teaching out of the hands of the mistresses who are now so severely taxed. Many girls have a natural aptitude for teaching, and almost all could impart some of their own acquirements to those who stand so much in need of education. It is my belief that such voluntary visiting and teaching would be welcomed by the teachers as an encouragement to themselves, and it need in no way interfere with the desired result of their labours. If the truth were known, many a girl is longing for something nobler and better than tennis, and crewel-work, and graceful surroundings can supply.

We do not know how far such a plan would be admissible under School Board regulations; but, if it can be carried out, the benefits would be mutually felt, we doubt not, by visitors, teachers and scholars. It seems to us, however, that young ladies who are earnestly desiring to be of service to their less fortunate neighbours could without difficulty find an outlet for their consecrated energies in the many evening and ragged schools throughout our large cities. If there is no such school near at hand, let them go out and gather a few of the waifs of the street into some comfortable room, and teach them, not only the elementary, "three R's," but the "three R's" of the Gospel.

Mr. G. N. Tyrell, Line-Superintendent of the Great Western Railway, at Paddington, sends to us a copy of some correspondence he has had with Mr. Henry Soltau with respect to "The terrible story" which appeared in our columns some weeks since. In his letter, Mr. Soltau having related how the story came to his knowledge, proceeds:—

> "Being desirous of tracing the girls, if possible, I caused inquiries to be made, when, to my annoyance, I found that the story had been handed down from one to another so that I was unable to obtain any further corroboration of it. I have since learnt that the persons with whom it originated are dead, and I cannot obtain the names or dates of the parties or events referred to.
> "I find that I have been most unwittingly made the vehicle of supplying information to the public that has proved to be of a thoroughly misleading nature. I cannot too much express my regret for the sensation that has been caused needlessly throughout the country and for the trouble that has arisen in consequence."

It is, of course, a matter of very great regret to Mr. Soltau and to ourselves that a statement should have been made which cannot be substantiated. But to pretend, as some have done, that therefore no such crime occurs as that which has been so painfully revealed of late, is much more mischievous and infinitely farther from the truth. If they are neither kidnapped, inveigled, nor enticed, whence come the thousands of fallen girls who may be seen on the streets of our cities every night?

During the past week petitions have been presented at the Home Office for the release of Mr. Stead. The first was from the Salvation Army, and contained 200,000 signatures. The second batch of petitions was presented by Mr. McLatchie and Mr. Henry Varley, and numbered 90,000 signatures. The third, represented by the Minors' Protection Society, numbered 45,000. Mr. Varley informs us that his letter to Sir Richard Cross, Home Secretary, asking that a deputation should be received, was not favourably answered. The Secretary of State said "it was contrary to the rule of the Home Department to receive a deputation in a criminal case." Surely this is red tape in excelsis! In the first place it is an abuse of language to speak of Mr. Stead as "a criminal." Further, the history of our Courts proves that, whether it is "a rule of the Home Department" or not to receive such a deputation, no circumstances could be conceived in which the visit of a deputation to Whitehall would be more necessary or beneficial than in certain criminal cases. Assuming that our machinery of State exists for the convenience and well-being of the people, rather than for the ease and comfort of officials, it is to be hoped that the Home Department will revise its rules with the new year.

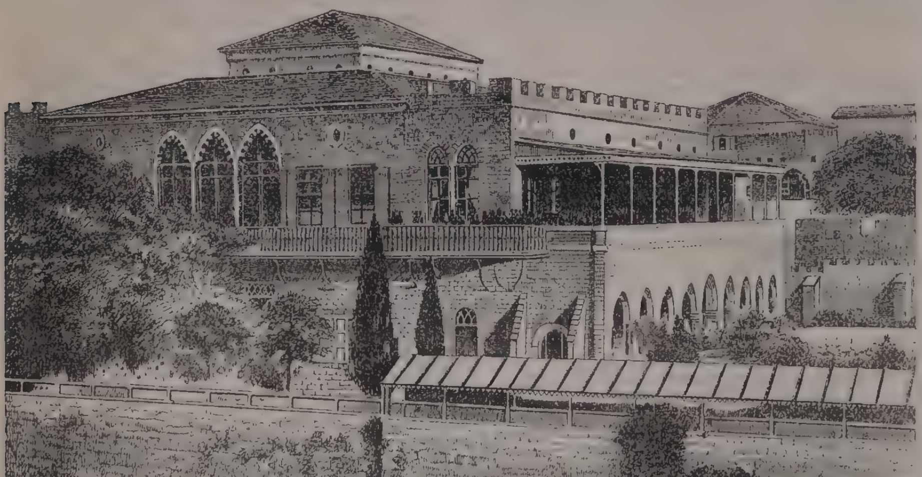
Everybody admits that the Irish imbroglio, in its political bearings and aspects, has not for many years been so complicated and so perplexing as at the present moment. Its settlement on any lasting basis will call not only for the highest statesmanship, but for the exercise of much patience and Christian forbearance on the part of the "loyal" and Protestant part of the community. These things give special emphasis to the call for prayer on behalf of Ireland, issued by Christian friends in Dublin, which we print on a preceding page. We commend it to the earnest and sympathetic consideration of all who come together next week to present their requests before the God of the whole earth.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME (44, Marylands-road, Paddington, W.).—The Superintendent, Miss Hall, says the past is the most satisfactory year the institution has had. One hundred cases have been treated. A little cottage has been taken in the country for those children who need a change. Almost all the cases received have previously been dismissed from other hospitals as hopelessly crippled. In addition to more funds, greatly needed, request is made for books, flowers, furniture, &c., all of which will be thankfully received. Adults are also received and treated, one case recorded being that of a woman who had been invalided for thirty-three years.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS.

THE motto of this mission, "Jehovah-Jireh," has been truly verified in its history. After the harrowing events of the massacre in 1860, Syria, sunk in darkness and the shadow of death, suddenly had the lamp of life kindled in her midst by the hand of a stricken widow lady. She commenced her work by the reading in Arabic of those comforting words of the Lord Jesus: "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in Me." The widows and the fatherless were fed and clothed; schools for the women, girls, boys, and little ones, sprang up in every quarter. Not one woman in a thousand could read; high and low, rich and poor, all were alike ignorant. But the Gospel was the basis of all the instruction given, and, upon this sure foundation, thousands upon thousands have learnt to know by personal experience, "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds."

Twenty-five years have passed away, and the light once kindled has spread over mountain and plain. The mission now numbers thirty schools in Beyrout, Damascus, Baalbec, Tyre, Mount Lebanon, and Antilibanus; three thousand pupils, thirty Bible women and Scripture readers. Some of the Bible women instruct the Mahomedan ladies in their latticed harems, others visit from house to house with the open Bible.



The Lebanon soldiers have a special Scripture-reader, who meets with them for prayer and gives them religious instruction. Schools for the blind have been established in several localities. They are taught to read on Moon's system, and in some measure to earn their livelihood by their handiwork. Some of the blind men have become Scripture-readers, and have a powerful influence from the very fact of being blind.

There are special schools for Mohammedan and Jewish girls, which are fully attended. The Old and New Testaments are taught with the same freedom as in the Christian schools. The Sunday classes for Mohammedans, Druses, and Oriental Christians are attended by several hundred women. In Damascus, a former pupil of the Training Institution in Beyrout, and who received her medical education and her diploma at Philadelphia, is practising successfully among the Mohammedan and other ladies, as well as among the poor, in that large city.

"The Blue Ribbon" movement has been introduced into Syria by the mission, and counts many members among the young men in various localities, in connection with the mission schools.

The Training Institution in Beyrout (an engraving of which accompanies this notice) is the centre whence all the work originates. It numbers about 100 girls, under training for the mission schools and Bible work. They are thoroughly instructed in the Holy Scriptures and in secular knowledge, in feminine employments, and in household duties. Busy hands and feet and thoughtful hearts are in activity from morning till evening in preparing the young people for their future sphere in life and their eternal destiny. Above ninety of the pupils are now engaged in teaching in the various schools.

The past year has been one of special trial and special blessing. The call of the Master to the devoted president, Mrs. Henry Smith, "to enter into the joy of her Lord," followed in a few days by the almost equally sudden call of the earnest friend of the mission, Mr. Johnson, was succeeded by great spiritual blessing. Little groups of anxious pleaders constantly met in prayer, and ere long, many were able "to rejoice in God their Saviour." The work of prayer and praise still flows on.

By the death of old subscribers the funds of this Evangelical Mission have so greatly fallen off, that the Council have been compelled to recommend the closing of some of the schools. May the Lord incline the hearts of his faithful stewards to avert so great a calamity. Help will be received at this office.

A MISSION SHIP FOR NORTH IRELAND.—The Bishop of Down has received £500 from Mr. Conway Dobbs, of Castle Dobbs, for the purchase of a steam mission vessel for the service of the Missions to Seamen chaplain in boarding the ships sheltering in the outer roadsteads of Belfast Lough.

DR. CUYLER ON DOCTRINAL PREACHING.

IN these days I fear that good, sound, old-fashioned, stout, doctrinal preaching is going out of vogue. I beg of you do not yield to this unhappy drift—no, not for an hour! Sound doctrine is the backbone of truly successful preaching. The mightiest discourses that have shaken vast assemblies, and sent sinners trembling to the cross of Christ, have been vitalised by some stupendous doctrina, or revealed teaching of Almighty God. My brilliant neighbour, Beecher, has unwisely said that "doctrine is only the skin of truth set up and stuffed!" Just imagine St. Paul writing to Timothy, "Give attendance to—the stuffed skin of truth!"

If you are ever dry, never be dry in your doctrinal sermons. Always preach doctrine with intense emotion. Heat your argument red hot, introduce all the lively and picturesque illustrations you can into your doctrinal discourses; it will make them interesting, and the truth will become pictorial to the mind's eye and to the memory. This was our Saviour's method. What a matchless discourse on the doctrine of God's mercy to the sinner is the parable of the Prodigal Son! A good minister is nourished in the words of faith and good doctrine.

EVANGELISATION.

A FEW days ago the indefatigable Dr. Baedeker was taking part in the Conference, at Manchester, on the Evangelisation of the World. Now he writes, "I have once more to cross the Channel, in January, for an evangelistic tour through Baden, Bavaria, Bohemia, Hungary into Russia. Time is shortening, the needs of the nations are crying to heaven. God put us each in our right places to do his will."

It is twenty years since Dr. Baedeker was converted. He had then lost one lung. Yet how has the Lord enabled him with the remaining lung to preach over Europe! He asks earnestly for prayer. But are there not many who can do more than pray for him, many strong and well able, who should follow him? If not, are there not many weak and feeble ones who will follow him, for "The lame take the prey." Just now, I know of people in the north of Europe hungering for the Gospel. This is their very best season for hearing. They have now long nights and much leisure, and will gladly flock out over the frozen snow to hear the Gospel.

HAMBURG.

About four years ago two Strangers' Rest workers went from England, and, in view of the many English and other sailors frequenting this port, succeeded in opening a Strangers' Rest there, and in inducing a number of Hamburg Christians to volunteer to work amongst the seamen in it. A beloved pastor, Mr. J. C. Aston, 7, Waterloo-str., Altona, Hamburg, was induced to become treasurer, notwithstanding his many other engagements. Mr. Aston now writes:—"I have got in nearly all the contributions that I can expect this year, and I have the prospect of closing the year with a deficit of about £25, but otherwise the Rest is flourishing. A number of young men who have been converted there have formed themselves into an association. They invite strangers and on Sunday evenings give them tea. The number of callers at the Rest has been greater last month than ever."

BREMERHAVEN.

About the same time some of the German Christians of Bremerhaven, also at the earnest solicitation of Strangers' Rest workers from England, agreed that, if a hall, &c., were engaged for them, they could supply gratuitous workers. This they have done, but their treasurer, Mr. Arnold Brunnschweiler, 8, Charlotte-street, Manchester, is now in urgent want of upwards of £70 to carry it on till the end of its financial year in April next. Pecuniarily this Rest depends as yet almost solely on England, but pays no salary except a woman about £15 a year. It might be a great help if friends from England would go and work amongst them for a week or two. Contributions for these Rests should be sent to either of the two treasurers, or to the office of The Christian.

THE HEATHEN.

A brother, writing from Yorkshire, says: "I write to offer myself and wife to work for Christ in the foreign mission fields anywhere, and will be ready for you as soon as we can dispose of business; so we leave ourselves in the Lord's hands." This brother is, I believe, prosperous in his business, and happy and useful as a lay preacher, but says: "When I read John iv. 35, 36, I dare not do other than offer myself to work abroad." Is he wrong, or now in his right mind, sitting at the feet of Jesus?

May beloved Dr. Baedeker's prayer be answered: "God put us in our right places to do his will."

SOLDIERS AT GIBRALTAR.

DEAR SIR,—I noticed in a recent number of your paper a letter from a soldier to Mrs. Evered Poole. It may interest your readers to know that we are trying to do something for the soldiers at the Europa end of the Rock, while our fellow-workers are trying to help those who are stationed in the town of Gibraltar.

In 1881 some of the 79th Highlanders wrote, telling me of the need there, and pressing me to go out and hold some meetings among them. In February, 1882, I went, and found that the Rock was a place of great temptation. Nearly 6000 soldiers were there, and with the exception of the Soldiers' Institute in the centre of the town, there was no place where a man could spend a leisure hour. In their own words "They had seen all over the Rock in a week after they arrived there, and then there was nowhere to go to." So they went to the canteen! Drink is cheap and bad, water scarce in summer, often brackish. Singing women are brought out from England by the publicans, to lure our men into their houses. The men crowd to these, and fall lower and lower through drink and sin.

I cannot describe what the Rock is like during the stay of the Channel Fleet in the Bay. The guard-rooms are filled with both soldiers and sailors, and there is much crime. Two sailors got five and eleven years for insubordination, during my first visit. A soldier struck his wife when drunk, and killed her. She also drank. Another soldier fell dead while drinking a quart of rum for a wager, and one lay down to sleep and died, while drunk. There was much besides. We held meetings among the soldiers for eleven weeks during our first visit. The men came in large numbers, and many professed faith in Christ. On the breaking out of the first Egyptian war, the regiments we laboured among were ordered to the front, and many died at that time and during the cholera epidemic.

On leaving the Rock the soldiers asked for lady workers who would visit the sick in the hospital and hold meetings among them; while those who were stationed at the south pleaded for a Home. We made known our request to God, and in the early part of 1883 I took out two ladies who were willing to go and live on the Rock. A furnished house was taken. God greatly blessed the labours of our workers. In seven regiments souls were brought to Christ, who are now living and labouring for Him. Two of these were ordered to India, five to Cairo and the Soudan. Last year the cottage had to be given up. We were fortunate in securing a house on the Europa main road, which we call the "Soldiers' Mission Home." We have a teaching-room, where the men come to study the Word of God, and to read the periodicals and papers we are able to send out to them. We have a class-room, which is crowded out on Sunday nights; it holds about fifty. Sometimes our overflow meeting is held in our own sitting-room. The landlord is a publican. The home is on the top flat of the public-house, and opens on to the upper road. He has offered to let to us a large hall, which he has used as a beer store. In the event of our not taking it, it is to be made into a singing saloon.

Our friends visit the soldiers stationed in Bueno Vista, Windmill-hill, Europa, and Rosia, and South Barracks; also the women's quarters, and hold a meeting for children weekly. Every night there is a meeting for the soldiers in the Home. The guard-rooms have their special care on Sunday mornings. They leave packets of papers for Sunday reading for officers and men. They go on board all troop-ships which pass to and from India, China, and Egypt, leaving testaments, tracts, and books, which are gladly received. The sick in hospital are not forgotten. Twice a week our friends carry flowers and little books to the sick, lonely, and dying. There are usually 350 sick.

Last year we had to go into debt to furnish our Home. There is still about £70 owing. Of this burden I would be glad to be relieved. The cost of the work is about £350 a year. Papers, books, and periodicals, for the reading-room; tracts, books, and Testaments for the guard-rooms, sick troop-ship and barracks, will be thankfully received by Miss Archibald, Soldiers' Mission Home, Europa Main-road, Gibraltar. And should it be laid upon any to help, I would be glad to receive what God puts it into their hearts to give.—Faithfully yours,

ALICE OSBORNE née TODD.

"RETROSPECT."

THE other evening, returning from the quarterly meeting of our Bible-class at Mr. Treverton's with a lady-worker at the Home of Industry, we asked her, when passing the "Bedford Institute," if she would like to see the little corner-room where we began to work for the Master in the East of London. To our delight the large hall through which we had to pass, was occupied by two ladies, teaching a group of young women the mysteries of converting flannel and calico into their own wearing apparel.

We are more and more convinced that since the introduction of sewing-machines the blessings of rest of body, and refreshment to mind, have been lost to our young womanhood in the disuse of the tiny instrument called the needle. Thirty years ago, every girl had to learn more or less how to make and mend her own clothing, thereby the better fitted for the duties of wife and mother. Now there is the continual craving for cheap ready-made garments: our main thoroughfares are filled with thousands of tired-out young women who have no desire for a quiet hour to be spent in making garments for themselves or some loved one, but who prefer the excitement of public amusements, then a hot supper or a draught at the flaring gin-palace, an unrestful sleep, and a weary awaking to resume the factory or workroom duty of another day.

During the past week one of our calls led us to be a watcher for the Master at a neighbouring police court. Would that every Christian lady in this land, who has not yet felt it her duty to become a total abstainer, could have accompanied us. "Horrors of darkness" were in that brief space of time revealed to us, in connection with our own sex, and we do not wonder at the late unveiling of hell; for drink is the ever-increasing cause and curse of our womanhood's degradation. To-day, "all women's cases," said one of the attendant police constables. The first called, was a young woman, living in our street, whom we knew well. She appeared like a maniac, hair matted and disheveled, clotted with blood. Her whole appearance caused our eyes to grow dim, our ears to close. The only words of the magistrate we can recall are "ten shillings costs." The poor creature had been often there. She turned away, and with a gruff voice said, "All right, sir." Oh! it was all wrong with her, and all wrong with the laws that permit the publicans to fatten on the young lives in our land.

The next was our case—a married woman and a mother about forty years of age, well dressed, found by a Christian constable in a den of thieves in our neighbourhood. Arriving from the country at a London railway station, a man offered to carry her box, and show her where she could get a cheap lodging. The next morning she woke up from the influences of an infernal dose to find her golden guineas gone, and her clothes being distributed at the pawnshops around by women of the lowest character. The man had disappeared, thus escaping the punishment due to him for the felony. We saved this mother from these immediate snares, and placed her in Miss Steer's "Bridge of Hope," Princes-square, E. None but the God of love "whose compassions fail not" can break the insidious habit which has caused her to leave home, husband, and children. Efforts are being made to save her from swift destruction in this terrible city.

In the outer waiting hall stood shattered, tattered, feathered, fringed, half-imbecile young (apparently servants) girls, some with friends, but more without a friend, others with children, and some with infants. We took deep interest in one sweet, young face, holding close to her a babe of three weeks old. She was there to obtain a summons to claim from the father support for her babe. We found she was applying at the wrong court; a Bridge of Hope worker befriended and shielded her in this her time of shame and sorrow.

With such a state of things some readers will say, there is no hope; but, looking back over what our own eyes have seen in the past weeks, whilst watching with eager yearning to save the orphan and the destitute children, we say there is hope for our dear East-enders. Payson Hammond's efforts among thousands of the young. Henry Hill's noble efforts for our youths in Whitechapel, 870 enrolled as members already, Treverton's factory, half of the hundred employés converted, George Holland's mission busily changing Angel-alley from a den of thieves to a palace beautiful for the young, Mr. Charrington's magnificent efforts, Miss Child's three houses filled with happy sailors of all nationalities. Miss Hedenström's Scandinavian Temperance Boarding-house about to build enlarged premises. These are only a few special missions.

In our recent roamings we came across a worker's meeting of an extraordinary character and size in Burdett-road—Pastor Archibald Brown, bright and full of Jesus, surrounded by deacons, Sunday-school teachers, and visitors of the poor for a mile around his Tabernacle. We also met an earnest clergyman and his devoted wife in the Master's service about to enter a match-box factory, in which more than 1000 young women are employed.

Knowing that twenty years ago there were no efforts like these in existence, and although evil is rampant, God's own dear children are being more drawn together in loving unity and service for the Master, we rejoice. There is less time wasted in long addresses and more time devoted to individual dealing; less proselytising, and more bearing each other's burdens; every one helping his neighbour; each class crying to the Lord for power amongst those with whom they work.

Who, but the Godly policemen in the midnight hour, could have found the slain among the young of these terrible streets; many of them are the men who "sigh and cry" at the evils they see issuing nightly from the haunts of sin.

Let Christian women at this season of the year invite those who cannot invite in return, and let the songs of Zion be sung, and the glorious Gospel of the grace of God proclaimed, and the result will be, if the motive be pure—more souls born into the kingdom.

Seventeen millions spent in war, and not one to aid our people to better homes. With millions of acres in our colonies, how short-sighted our rulers are to the interests of the people's welfare; and the population of London increasing at the rate of one thousand weekly.

Thank God the loaf is cheap, or the heavy forces, with all their drilling, would not be able to keep the many out of work quiet at this time of commercial depression. Let all who can at this season make the poor and needy happy, if only for one evening; thereby may many be saved. ANNIE MACPHERSON.

Home of Industry, Spitalfields, E.

NEW BRIGHTON Y.M.C.A.—The programme just issued announces prayer-meetings, conversational Bible-classes, evangelistic services, children's meetings, &c. During the past year God has abundantly blessed the efforts made, much good seed has been sown, the aggressive and unsectarian character of the institution has been maintained, and a centre of miscellaneous mission work has increasingly developed. Temperance effort has been represented by six practical lectures by Temperance advocates. Mr. T. A. Leigh is the Hon. Secretary.

GOD'S SHADOWS.

If we preachers and teachers took lessons oftener from the Bible, not only as regards doctrine and truth, but as regards ways and means, we would all learn truth sooner and teach it more rapidly. To give truth is one thing, to give it clearly is another. To teach a wise man is one thing, to teach an ignorant wayfaring man is another. To impress truth again and again is one thing, to charm with truth another. Depend upon it, many a very young person stood and listened to our Lord's parables, carried the parable away home and told it at home, although the child knew not where the key to the parable lay.

Oh, the depth of the wisdom of God in giving the mode of teaching as well as the matter. Our long dry sermons, with their four or five heads, bear no resemblance to the preaching of Christ. They were born and nurtured in a time of ice and death; they charm no saint, they send sinners to sleep.

Jeremiah's preaching illustrations are manifold: A potter's house (xviii. 3); baskets of figs (xxiv. 2); preacher puts on bonds, and attracts by them (xxvii. 2); the Rechabites furnish illustrations (xxxv. 5).

Ezekiel: Draws tiles and preaches (iv. 1); weighs his beard and burns it (v. 1); gesticulates violently (vi. 11); removes his goods before them and explains (xii. 3); eats and drinks with trembling (xii. 18); sighs, and makes them ask why (xxi. 6); smites hands together and preaches (xxi. 14); boils a pot before them and preaches (xxiv.); and so on.

The prophets are awfully in earnest; they see the storm coming; they see the poor sailors careless, drunken, gambling, and every effort is used to rouse them.

FORMALITY AND ORATORY

go to the wall when we are in terrible anxiety. The man who stands before my house at midnight and shouts out anger, and thunders at my door, is an orator; but he does not know it—his oratory is reality, he knows no formality. If removing the roof of my house would arouse me, and he could do it, he would, and he would only act as some acted who wished to set a palsied man before the Lord immediately. Were they rebuked for their impatience? No. Were they rebuked for their audacity? No. Their faith and impatience were commended and rewarded.

Many preach to the young in the way they ought to preach to the old—they speak simply, boldly, figuratively, and the young grasp it. The preacher turns to the old and preaches, how? He often buries the truth under a whole dictionary of useless words, he clothes Christ's ideas in such a mass of verbiage as to defy an ordinary hearer to roll it out again. He takes long roads so as to avoid short cuts. He carries the weary hearer round and round the house for an hour before he opens the door and lets him in, and when he does let him into the Gospel door, he fences it with such a barricade of "ifs" and "buts" as to defy immediate entrance.

GOD'S SHADOWS

are glorious helps. See that son Isaac removed from the altar; see him standing as the ram caught in the thicket is cast on the altar; hear Abraham saying in the "stead" of Isaac—in Isaac's place. God thus gives a whole sermon book in substitution, as clear to the boy of ten as to Sir Isaac Newton. Yea, as clear to the child of six years old as to the veteran of sixty. Impossible to misunderstand the sermon, impossible to misunderstand the object, impossible to misunderstand the liberty thus preached to Isaac. Isaac for three days was a condemned man; one who must die for sin. But on the third day Isaac was a free man; another had died in his stead. "In the stead of Isaac" is the Bible word, and if in his stead, then every trusting Jew knew the object of all the rams and all the goats being slain, and the trusting ones were as safe as if they had been punished, and were raised again clear of all penalty.

When Manoah saw Christ, as the Messenger, step into the flame and ascend with the sacrifice, which sacrifice was a figure of Himself—Manoah knew He was God, and called Him "God"; for no angelic spirit would have dared to appropriate the offering that belonged to God only. What a shadow to Manoah! what a glorious figure! Manoah had a wife better taught even than himself, and she answered that thus God had "received" the offering, and thus, also, God had shown to them his way and his character. What a short sermon; what deep teaching; what doctrine, and yet simplicity.

See Christ, in the first chapter of Joshua: "Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise." Christ my Servant is dead; now therefore arise. Cross the Jordan now. Joshua, as resurrection Christ, can only appear after the death of Moses, and in how many days? "Within three days ye shall pass over this Jordan." On the third day after the death of Moses, Joshua is resurrection Christ, and the whole note of the chapter is resurrection—"only be strong and of good courage." Oh that God's own shadows in the Bible were made men's lights and models! Gordon Forlong.

THE EPISCOPAL MISSION, NEW YORK.

As noted in our last issue, The Independent, of New York, gave in its issue of December 10 a very lengthy and exhaustive notice of the special evangelistic mission then being held in many of the Episcopal churches of that city. There were about a dozen special missioners engaged in the work, chief among them being Mr. Aitken, with his helper Mr. Stephen, Dr. Pigou, of Halifax, Rev. W. S. Rainsford, and others. The Mission extended over several weeks, and embraced a number of churches; when this report was written it was not complete; the results were very encouraging so far as ascertained. We notice that Mr. Sankey was present at one of the Sunday evening services in St. George's Church, with Mr. Aitken as preacher, and sang two Gospel hymns.

Perhaps the greatest interest attached to the noonday services for business men, held by Mr. Aitken, in Trinity Church, Broadway—facing Wall-street, the great centre of Stock Exchange business. From the accounts given, they remind us of the similar services conducted by Mr. Aitken, some years ago, in the church in Lothbury, close to the Bank of England and Capel-court. Besides a special sketch of these services in Trinity Church, The Independent has a descriptive leading article with respect to them, from which we quote as follows:—

"Let the reader visit with us Trinity Church to-day at noon. From the head of Wall-street the bell will ring out the invitation to the house of God. From Broadway, from Wall-street, from Broad-street, all the way from the City Hall to the Battery the young men and old men who carry on their shoulders the burden of the business of the Metropolis will be seen briskly walking to New York's most historic edifice. Enter with them the old church. You will find it already crowded full of men. Not a woman is to be seen. They are all business men. You see there the bank presidents, officers of our great insurance companies, merchants, brokers, cashiers, and clerks. A very large proportion of them are gray-headed men. Such an imposing and influential and shrewd, clear, and hard-headed body of men you will find gathered together nowhere else. These are the noonday audience of the mission at Trinity Church. They fill the seats and crowd the spaces behind.

"The service opens with the briefest devotional service or the singing of a familiar revival hymn, not to be found in the Psalter at the end of the Prayer Book, nor in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern.' You have heard it in the Moody and Sankey meetings, and everybody in the audience has heard it, and it is sung with a masculine volume of sound which makes the arches ring. Rev. W. H. Aitken, one of the English missioners, who are paying back to America the debt which England owes us for Mr. Moody's work there, rises to speak. It was in Mr. Moody's meetings that he learned the value of such services, and he has adapted them to the Episcopal forms and conditions.

"Trinity Church was rather reluctant, it is said, to consent to the innovation. They said the people would not come to the meetings. They have not made it easy for Mr. Aitken. He would rather have the freedom of the platform, as he has had at other churches where he has preached, and where he could speak with the liberty which an orator needs. Instead of this he is perched up in the air in a lofty little box of a pulpit, under a big sounding-board, snug up against the row of columns on the right side of the house. There is no chance for movement, and even gesture is awkward. There he stands, in his white robe, in the most conventional and inconvenient spot in which he could be put, and thence he opens his address.

"But such an address! It is not read, but is, we are sure, carefully prepared. There is, however, about it no sign of anything but the purest extemporaneous freedom. Mr. Aitken's voice is clear, melodious and strong. He smites directly at his subject, which is to show what life is worth living, and what is not worth living. He is addressing business men, and he knows it. He does not talk anything but business, his business with them, and his Master, which is to tell them how worthless is a life which is devoted solely to what we call business, to adding dollar to dollar; for what? That we may have more dollars, that at last we may die and carry nothing with us, and leave much behind us. The life worth living he contrasts with the life not worth living; and he tells them of Christ's life of service and denial and death, such a failure, after earth's standards, but the great success before heaven's standards. 'Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given Him a name which is above every name.' The address is intensely dramatic. It abounds not so much in illustration as in vivid personal appeal. The hearer living a life not worth the living is not only talked at, he is talked with. He answers back; and the dialogue is kept up until he is silenced, is obliged to confess that God and the speaker are right and he is wrong. With intense dramatic fervour the preacher repeats the lines

Almost persuaded Christ to receive;
Seems now some soul to say:
Go, Spirit, go thy way;
Some more convenient day
On Thee I'll call!'

Argument and appeal are blended together, and the hearer says 'Amen.'

"Of course, most of those present are communicants of churches of all denominations; for the persons addressed are just those men of large business and affairs, who carry the offices and burdens in the churches. In the Brokers' Boards and Merchants' Exchanges you will find more Sunday-school superintendents and elders and wardens than in almost any other companies of men anywhere. But they need just this preaching. Thus they are reminded of the worldliness of this world, and they learn what is the depth of meaning in such words as 'conversion' and 'consecration.' In the congregation before you there are, also, the same proportion of those not professing Christ as will be found in all other revival meetings. While the great majority are already believers, there will be large numbers who need just this faithful proclamation of Christ to arouse them to the sense of their own personal obligation to receive Christ into their personal life and faith.

"And this, which is nothing other than just such a revival meeting as would be welcomed in any Baptist, or Methodist, or Presbyterian, or Congregational church, is in the old conservative Trinity. The crowds whom Mr. Aitken bids come forward fill the sacred spaces of chancel, choir, and altar, and crowd against the robes of Morgan Dix and his associate 'priests.' It is a revival meeting of the sort we know and love so well, not changed, but only a little disguised by more churchly attire and name. The preacher has on a white gown, instead of a black coat, and he uses the Roman Catholic names mission and missioner instead of revival and evangelist. But the fervour, and intensity, and the methods are all there.

"What is doing every day in Trinity Church is done every night in fifteen other of the principal Episcopal Churches of the city. In each the multitude is invited to attend. The voluntary chorus sings the familiar revival hymns; the missioner, from a platform which has almost forgotten its linen decencies, preaches without restraint immediate conversion; and the after-meeting follows for inquirers. This is the Episcopal Mission. Previous revival meetings, under Mr. Moody and others, missions in Catholic churches, have called together larger single audiences, but never before has so general an effort been made to bring the Gospel immediately home to the people everywhere. While the inspiration is to be found outside of the Episcopal Church, in the Moody revival meetings and the Catholic missions, we owe great thanks to the Episcopal Church for adopting the plan now so heartily and so generally. It proves that the evangelical spirit is not lost in that Church.

"We earnestly hope that all ministers and Christians outside of this city, in all parts of the country, and of every denomination, will follow the noble example of Trinity and other Episcopal churches in New York by now opening their places of worship for religious services. We believe that Christian people everywhere will praise God in their hearts for what is doing to promote his cause in this city. Let the good work spread far and wide, until every city, town and village in the whole nation is thoroughly awakened. For such a great blessing let all devoutly pray."

A NEW YEAR'S REVERIE.

"The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

ANOTHER year of pilgrim-life is ended
        And gone into the past!
A year with joy and sorrow strangely blended,
Angels of love, that have our path attended,
        Though skies seemed overcast;
A year of tears, and prayers that have ascended
        To heaven where all things last.

But yet a year of joy, for we are nearing
        The fuller life above;
The sunshine of God's face from mists is clearing,
The story of the cross grows more endearing,
        With stronger power to move;
We think with trembling joy of the appearing
        Of Jesus, whom we love.

And as for us another year is waking,
        We will with hope arise,
And every earth-born care, and weight forsaking,
For Jesus' sake, each sorrow always taking,
        Will lift our waiting eyes
Up to the place that He for us is making,
        In yonder cloudless skies;

And pray, that "as the lilies," daily growing,
        We to his likeness may
Be thus conformed, his power to usward knowing;
And to our little world his beauty showing
        To light the upward way,
That those we love may see the radiance glowing
        "Unto the perfect day."

THE FEMALE MISSION TO THE FALLEN continues to send forth experienced women to reclaim the lost. The receipts for the past year unfortunately were lower by £1000 than those of the previous year. Many facts are given, which combine to form a report of great interest. At the various Homes the work has been very encouraging. The address of the Secretary is Mr. A. J. Maddison, Reformatory and Refuge Union, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

SICK CHILDREN'S DINNER TABLE.—The nineteenth annual report of this mission, 66, Earl-street, Lisson-grove, N.W., says:—"During the past year 2448 dinners have been given to poor children, more than 400 shilling orders on the dairy or milk shop have been issued, and more than 100 sixpenny orders on the butcher." Every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday throughout the year, a pleasant sight may be seen at half-past twelve in a pleasant little room at the above address. About £150 is all that is required for the maintenance of this work. Contributions may be sent to Dr. Thorn, 87, Harrow-road, W.

The Book World.

The Gospel Trumpet. 6d. Partridge & Co. Gives a clear and unmistakably certain sound. There are many choice extracts, besides much original matter.

Good News. 4d. monthly. Partridge & Co. Strong, brief, pointed Gospel papers, well illustrated, and admirably adapted for all earnest labourers in the Lord's vineyard.

Old Jonathan, the District and Parish Helper (1s. 6d. Collingridge, Aldersgate-street), makes an acceptable volume. One feature in it is the absence of anything "frivolous," and its teaching gives no uncertain sound.

The Teacher at Work (Elliot Stock, 1d.) is a wonderful pennyworth. It is a new monthly magazine for all who train the young in home or Sunday-school. The "Class Preparations" are very good; we wish the new venture every success.

Village Papers; or, The History of the Morris Family. By Miss Kennion. 9d. Shaw & Co. Most interestingly and instructively written, containing sound, sensible advice, wonderfully adapted for mothers' meetings, or as a prize for elder girls.

Communion and Conflict. By Capt. Dawson. 1s. Shaw & Co The author always gives his readers some strong meat. In these helps to spiritual life and service, he offers to the believer that which will interest and advance the soul-life.

First Aid to the Wounded, being No. 2 of the "Bible Talk" Series. By George Soltau. 2d. Shaw & Co. Very ingeniously conceived, these suggestions for the treatment of a wounded soul should be read by all who have to deal with anxious inquirers.

A Child of the Morning. The True Story of Little Emily. By Miss Marsh. 1s. Shaw & Co. A tender record of a sweet child's life, full of health and freshness. "Little Emily" will speak, out of her morning brightness, to many hearts, especially those of bereaved parents.

School and Home; an Illustrated Companion to the "Systematic Bible Teacher," vol. iv. (67, Paternoster-row), is helpful and thorough. Parents, too few of whom take their children to systematic Bible lessons, should find this system a great boon in the training of their children in the greatest of all truths.

More "Messages." By Charlotte Murray. 1s. 6d. Partridge. The writer of these verses is well known for the perennial freshness of her thoughts; these "Messages," in their large, clear type, must prove a source of blessing to many. "Narcissus, a Lesson for Christian Workers," is especially good.

In the Shadow of His Hand; Thoughts for Lonely Hours, by Rose Porter; My Morning Word, Counsel and Comfort for Daily Need. 1s. each. John F. Shaw & Co. These dainty little volumes of the "Parchment Library" have already a large circulation, and deservedly so; they are spiritual, simple and true.

Songs of Earth and Heaven. By Rev. Newman Hall. 3s 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. These are truly songs in the sweet sense of the word that means music. Some of them are already well known, but they will be better known and appreciated in their present handsome form. Among the sweetest, brightest and holiest of these outpourings of a musical heart are, "Prayer answered in Disappointment," "Echo," and "The God of all Consolation."

Hymns and Tunes, composed by Rev. J. G. Gregory, M.A. 1s 6d. Partridge & Co. Twenty-five very good examples of the modern hymn. Musical, simple, and often written with great feeling, they ought to be popular. The Gifts of Healing, by the same author, enters with an impartial spirit into the subject. He fully believes that the gifts of healing are still amongst us as in early days; at the same time, he urges that their possession and exercise do not exclude the use of the ordinary means provided for alleviating suffering.

Conversation. By Rev. G. W. Bowes, B.A. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. An excellent little book, the drift of which may be gathered from one of the author's sentences, "There never was a time when the Gospel of an honourable and Christian tongue more needed to be preached than now." If language, says Mr. Bowes, be the gift of God, should it not be employed so as to honour Him? With regard to the "fruit of the lips" as with all other fruit-bearing, the secret of blessing is being oneself close to Him, whose own ear was wakened morning by morning that He might know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary.

Bible Work at Home and Abroad. Volume for 1885. Messrs. Cassell & Co. A report of the valuable work begun by that noble woman, the late Mrs. Ranyard. Let no one pass the book because of the title. From cover to cover it is a record of love and labour, and will surely open many eyes and hearts to the importance of Bible work and nursing at home and abroad.

Footsteps of Truth. An Independent Monthly Journal. Edited by C. Russell Hurditch. 4d. J. F. Shaw & Co. This high-toned and spiritual magazine has secured an honourable position in our serial literature. The first part for the new year has, amongst other valuable papers, one by the late Rev. Samuel Martin, "Beware of One False Step," which we warmly commend to the attention especially of younger readers. Under "Friends in Heaven," the memorial record of Dr. Mulock is of deep interest. The other papers are for the most part of considerable interest. We cannot say much for the exposition of the Revelation, though by a devout and much-esteemed writer. It is astonishing that the book, which is the condensed essence of all preceding Scripture, should afford no richer thought to so mature a Christian as Mr. Newberry.

The Silver Morn and Prophetic Voice. Edited by Revs. W. Frith and Lindsay Young. 2d. monthly. Partridge. It is useful to know the current of thought which runs through the minds of any body of good men. There is much truthful and edifying matter in this periodical, but as it is a good deal occupied with the Revelation, we must repeat our surprise that men so spiritually minded can be satisfied with such meagre views of this glorious book. We can only account for it by the trammels of a narrow system of interpretation.

The Home Friend Annual (Partridge) contains moral, valuable, and fitting matter for young women, including a Y.W.C.A. monthly supplement

The Curse and the Cure!! Points for Politicians and Thoughts for Thinkers 1d. Alliance Offices, 15, Great George-street. S.W. Statistics and testimonies for all on the side of Temperance.

Baptist Almanack for 1886; Congregational Almanack. 2d. each. Robt. Banks, Racquet-court. These well known annuals become increasingly valuable by reason of original matter, helpful to preachers.

That Which Was Lost. 3d. The Christmas number of The Reformatory and Refuge Journal. May be obtained at the Office of the Institution, 32 Charing-cross, 7d. For 7d. an excellent photograph of the late Earl of Shaftesbury is included.

The Church Missionary Pocket Almanack and Kalendar for 1886 seems to be perfect in its way, and contains a fund of missionary information and statistics. It is bound in Morocco leather, with two pockets and band, and is very compact and neat.

Illustrations is the title of a threepenny monthly magazine which under the editorship of Mr. Francis George Heath, will commence in January It is designed to be "a pictorial review of knowledge of all kinds" The publishers will be Messrs. Wells, Gardner, Darton & Co.

The Temperance Century. By Rev. W. F. Crafts. 1s. 6d. Funk & Wagnalls. A mighty onslaught upon the demon Drink. All parents and philanthropists should read "The Problem of Great Cities," while the "Centennial Symposium" should be carefully studied by Temperance workers.

The Preacher's Analyst will in future be united with The Lay Preacher, and the combined magazines published at 2d. monthly (instead of 6d.), by Mr. F E. Longley. They will be under the editorial care of Rev. J. J. S. Bird, B.A., who has for five years edited The Preacher's Analyst.

Fifty Years' Walk with God. By Dr Asa Mahan, on the completion of his eighty-fifth year 1d. Elliot Stock. A wonderful record of grace, mercy, and truth, breathing the spirit of the living God. None can doubt the possession by the writer of the peace so eloquently described, the grace so powerfully illustrated.

The Heavenly Shepherd. A Sacred Cantata. By Chas. Darnton. 6d 56, Old Bailey. This is in the form of a Service of Song, and would appropriately take the place of some of the productions which often absorb the time and patience of choirs trained to interest and evangelise the masses. The music is very good.

Local Option (The Imperial Parliament Series). By W. S. Caine, M.P., William Hoyle, F.S.S, and Rev. Dawson Burns. 1s. Swan Sonnenschein. To those interested in statistics, and seeking reliable information on the subject, this little volume will be invaluable. Those who would protect themselves and others from the dangers of the "traffic" would do well to read it.

Papers for the People. No 21. "The Earl of Shaftesbury: His Life and Work." No 22, "Two Ways of Looking at Things" No. 23, "Tied to his Wife's Apron Strings." All of them powerful, pithy, and pointed, they leave nothing to be desired in the way of good reading for the people. "Enoch Roden's Training, by Hesba Stretton (2d), is a cheap reprint of the noble and touching story of a boy's life by this gifted writer. The Religious Tract Society deserves the thanks of all interested in the growth of the popular mind for these healthy and cheap publications.

The following are from Messrs. Partridge & Co.:—"My Strength": A Word for the New Year. By Lady Beaujolois Dent 1d. RAMBLING ROB'S JOURNAL.—2.

"HOW far to Elstow?" I asked of a porter at the Bedford Midland station. "About a mile and a half, sir. Keep down this road, for a little way; then turn to your right; you will go over a new bridge, and then you had better ask again." In company with a Methodist brother who has joined me for this ramble, I trudge away towards the Bedfordshire village which, in all lands, and for all time, has been rendered famous by a once poor tinker, whom it furnished with a home.

There is no mistaking it when we find it. The old meeting-house on the green, and the green itself on which old John, then young John, played tipcat, are just as sketches on the covers of "The Pilgrim" have led us to expect. The old church is a disappointment; it is a curiosity, we admit, with the tower standing some distance from the other part of the building, but oh, this so-called restoration of old churches! Why don't people build new ones, and leave the old, that have served a good purpose, to sink down in respectable decay? We want to see Elstow Church as John saw it in his day, and we cannot; while, as to the ruin behind the church, a locked gate intervenes between us and it, and we turn murmuringly away.

But here is a minister of some kind! His dress is not that of an "Anglican!" Who, and what is he? "And you, like ourselves, sir, have come over to see the old home of immortal John?" "Yes; do you belong to the same section of the Church as did he?" "We both belong to the same Church, but not exactly to the same section of it; my friend, here, is a Methodist, I am in the Church of England, and you?" "Free Church of Scotland." Another minute, and Professor Salmond (for our Scotch friend is none other than he)—my Methodist brother, and myself, all go, as brethren in Christ, to our heavenly Father, rejoicing that, for a little while, at least, we may forget Calvinism, Arminianism, with every other "ism," and ask, among other things, a blessing on the one true Church to which we all belong.

Disappointed in the church, we are immensely pleased with the old cottages of the hamlet, and their overhanging upper stories—though not so much so with that which bears the name of "Bunyan's Cottage." One who is naturally inclined to be sceptical in everything would wonder whether this was indeed the home of Bunyan. But may be it was, nor does it much matter; for, if, like the old gaol on Bedford bridge, in which the man was imprisoned for the truth's sake, his Elstow house has disappeared from the earth, yet his name, and better still, his works, imperishably remain. Read his "Jerusalem Sinner Saved," anxious soul; nothing of its kind to surpass it.

At Bedford, my Methodist friend and I part company, and I fall in with one of the most exacting natures that I have met with for many a day. "Do you know Bedford?" "A little." "Can you tell me how the cause of Christ is getting on here?" "Plenty of church, but little of Christ, I fear."

"Have you many Methodists in the town?" "A considerable number, but they are awfully Ritualistic at one of their chapels."

"You have a Bunyan chapel here; are the Baptists doing well?" "I don't think they would care to have Bunyan among them now."

"How about 'the Brethren,' then?" "They love each other, from what I hear of them, something after the fashion of Cain and Abel."

Poor man! He evidently suffers from a sluggish liver, and sees matters through yellow-tinted spectacles. I'll get away from him, if I can, and soon be on my road to Legh Richmond's Turvey. Here it is, but what can be meant by all these crosses about the place? Crosses starting up in front of a homestead, crosses built into the brickwork of a wall; a big cross, too, on the top of the church! I could almost wish I had never come near the place. I remember how, when once I made a pilgrimage to Arreton, another of Mr. Richmond's parishes, I found "Hymns Ancient and Modern," in the church, and how I almost wished I could get away the remains of Little Jane, the Young Cottager, as having no right to be left there, with affairs so altered. Now I have come to Turvey, and these crosses are everywhere thrust before my eyes. Though I wish to be very charitable to everyone, I ask myself the question, "Does someone want to crucify Christ afresh?"

An old man, who happens to be in the church, points out the spot where rest the remains of him who penned the ever-fresh "Annals of the Poor." This too, I suppose, is another "restored" church. "Here are the monuments of the Mordaunt family, sir." "Don't care to look at them." The old man, however, had known Mr. Richmond, and I must stop and hear what he has to say about him. His story ended, I turn my back on the church, feeling that I shall never care to come back to either village or church again.

But here is a discovery, indeed, though I have now left Turvey behind. A dear old saint, whose husband regularly attended Mr. Richmond's ministry, and who knew him well herself! My old friend is nearly eighty-five, but she still makes the Bedfordshire pillow lace, like the other old lady, between whom, and Voltaire, Cowper draws such a striking comparison. An old Calvinistic Christian, too, of the school of Legh Richmond, John Newton, and Thomas Scott; one might almost fancy while hearing her talk, that she was one to whom Newton wrote some of those letters published in his well-known "Cardiphonia." I agree with her that "The Olney Hymns" adapt themselves better to the believer's experience than those of any other collection I have met with, though I cannot content myself to leave her with the idea that doubts and fears afford more sure marks of indwelling grace than peace, joy, assurance, and love. She hopes that, through her Saviour's merits, she shall be found worthy of a place in heaven. I tell her if she fails of this, I am sure Satan will have difficulty in knowing what to do with one who so truly loves the Lord Jesus, as I feel she does. She smiles at the thought; we have a word of prayer, and I hasten on my journey, to make yet another interesting discovery.

It is an old gardener I meet with now. "Have you ever heard of Legh Richmond?" "Yes."

"Do you know if John Bunyan ever came out preaching in these parts?" "Yes, he did. He used to preach in a barn in this village; at least, so I have heard old people say when I was a boy; their forefathers heard him, though of course they themselves didn't. I've heard them say, too, that he used to preach in yon wood. The people of Steventon, Turvey, Pavenham, and Carlton, used to meet him there. There was no singing, for fear they should be found out; and once, when it rained, the women sewed their aprons together, and held them over his head."

It is very hard to look over yonder towards Olney, Weston Underwood, and those other places, where Newton preached, Scott wrote, Cowper sang, and Hervey meditated among the tombs, and not be able to do that part of the country, but it cannot be to-day.

HAMMERSMITHY. M.C.A.—The annual meeting of the Hammersmith Branch of the Y.M.C.A. was lately held at Broadway House, Hammersmith. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided. Mr. Franklin, the Hon. Secretary, read the second annual report, which stated that since the formation of the branch about 200 young men had availed themselves of its privileges. He was sorry to report a total deficit at the close of the present year of £153 12s. 8d. A further sum of about £300 was required before a hall could be erected. The Chairman said one of the most hopeful signs of the times was the work of the Y.M.C.A., which was continually spreading and taking root in new neighbourhoods. These days were days of perplexity, but he trusted they were also days of hopefulness. He warned them against the danger of excitement, and said they would have perfect peace if their mind was stayed on Christ. Mr. Russell Hurditch, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. C. Graham, Rev. H. Miller, and Rev. A. Norris also spoke.

CYPRUS.

SIR,—I have only seen to-day THE CHRISTIAN of Nov. 19, in which inquiry is made as to Gospel work in Cyprus. There is an agent of the Bible Society who resides at Larnaka and makes periodical tours through the island. When he visited this district last summer he told me that he is able to sell a good many portions of Scripture in the Greek language and some in Turkish.

Grants of tracts and Bibles or Testaments have been made to different persons both by the Bible Society and the Religious Tract Society, and these have been distributed as opportunity offered. Some were this year given away as prizes in some of the Greek schools, others have been distributed among convicts. The wife of the Presbyterian minister at Limassol (Rev. W. Fergusson) formed a class for teaching Greek girls, but I am not sure whether she has been able to maintain it.

Meetings have been held in connection with the Week of Prayer by some of the English communities at Nikeria and Limassol, and out of those held last January at Limassol a regular weekly prayer-meeting arose. If your correspondent is desirous of assisting evangelical work here, I shall be happy to render any aid I can.—Your obedient servant,

E. R. KENYON, Capt. R.E.,

A WORK OF GRACE IN GLASGOW.

SIR,—A wonderful work of God's grace has been going on in the west-end of Glasgow during the last few months. For some years past much prayer has been going up to God for an opening in evangelistic work among those of our better classes. In the spring of this year a few drawing-room meetings for ladies were held, and in November Mr. Campbell White and Mr. George Clarke, London, addressed a week of meetings specially for young ladies. The results were very encouraging, and the Lord owned the work in very many conversions.

A further week was entered upon, and at the end of it general meetings were inaugurated. The Sunday evening service was very largely attended, and was one of the most remarkable evangelistic gatherings ever known in this city. A few week-evening meetings were held and the work was carried on, on the Sabbath evenings of November by various laymen. On December 1 Mr. Clarke returned for a ten days' mission, and addressed general meetings and meetings specially for young men. It is unwise to tabulate results, but I think it is not out of place to say, that we believe there have been several hundred conversions. We would add that a large weekly prayer-meeting with almost eighty members is being carried on by the ladies, that a union for fellowship and work has been inaugurated among an equal number of men, and that seven or eight Bible readings are being held, weekly or fortnightly, in various drawing-rooms.

By way of further extending the work, deputations have visited Edinburgh, Stirling, Pollockshields, and other neighbourhoods, and, by the simple testimony of God's power to save, have been the means of blessing. We give God all the glory, for He it is who has answered prayer, and we ask the prayers of your readers, that those who are directing the work may indeed be guided by Him, and that all may stand in his strength.—Yours very sincerely,

JOHN W. ARTHUR,
Secretary to the Committee.

MOUNT HERMON GIRLS' ORPHAN HOMES.—We have learnt with great sorrow that Miss M. A Cole, of this Home, has been dangerously ill, owing to the breaking of a blood-vessel. She is somewhat better, though still lying in a very critical state. Prayer is desired that she may be spared to the work in which she has laboured so many years.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIANS AND ATHEISTS.

Sir,—As the interests and aims of Atheism must ever be opposed to Christianity, it seems natural to ask, why so many Christians supported the late proposal to alter the existing law so as to admit the representative of Atheism into Parliament. In my view, the principal reason appears to be the prevalence of a superficial and false definition of political and religious liberty.

The principles of Atheism, and especially of Bradlaughism, consist in the negation of all religion. Its teachings in active and unfettered operation would set aside the Divine ordinance of marriage, and promote a condition of morality subversive of the best interests of the State.

When it is asked, therefore, "By what right can we exclude a properly-elected Atheist from Parliament?" my answer simply is "Because to admit him would be opposed to all sound principles of political and religious liberty."

In proof of this position I shall cite Dymond* (a writer recently very strongly recommended by Mr. John Bright), than whom probably there are few better authorities on such subjects:—

"Political liberty implies the existence of such political institutions as secure, with the greatest practicable certainty, the future possession of freedom . . . because it is as necessary to proper government that securities for freedom should be framed, as that present freedom should be permitted. . . . A government must, if it would fulfil the duties of a government, accumulate to the utmost, securities for beneficial measures hereafter."

Now, I think it must be acknowledged that not in any stage of its development does Atheism offer a single security of the kind.

Again, Dymond says, "It does not follow because a man is not represented that he is not politically free. The question is, whether as good securities for liberty exist without permitting him to vote, as with it." If this principle applies to persons disallowed by law to vote, how much more does it apply to elected representatives disallowed by law to sit in Parliament?

Still further, the same author says, "It is a very common mistake amongst writers to assume some particular privilege or institution as a test of this liberty—as something without which it cannot be enjoyed. . . . . In fine, political liberty is not a matter that admits of certain conclusions from theoretical reasoning; it is a question of facts; a question to be decided, like questions of philosophy, by reasoning founded upon experience."

Has not experience plentifully shown us that the inevitable effect of Atheistic teaching is to subvert social order and government by removing the chief source of moral restraint and moral development? Even philosophical heathen statesmen in olden time considered it essential to good government that the masses should be under the influence of some sort of superstition, or other popular sentiment. Our own observation in the present day corroborates this view, but we know by experience that the religion of Jesus Christ supplies this imperative national necessity in an eminent degree, effecting as it does moral changes which promote law and order in the highest sense.

It is argued by some "that the present system of Parliamentary oaths does not and never will keep Atheists out of Parliament." This, however, merely goes to show that it is insufficient for the purpose. That it would be well if Parliamentary (as well as judicial) oaths were entirely done away, is a view I could endorse if we had direct legislation against Infidel representation in Parliament; but seeing it has been the custom of this country; to adopt a test which has excluded infidels as well from the legislature, let us by all means retain the latter until we have secured the former. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the late abortive Bill to abolish Parliamentary Oaths was framed to relieve an Atheist, and that, had it been successful, the Atheists of this country would have regarded it as a victory for their cause. From their point of view it was (what it really is) a question of Atheism as against Christianity.

How much soever the existing statutes may be evaded, those atheists who, it is alleged, now get into Parliament, do so dishonestly, whilst the law undoubtedly recognises, as a principle, that an atheist is not a fit and proper person to make and administer the laws of a Christian country.

This country is (nominally, at least,) Christian, and our laws are professedly based upon God's laws, as revealed in Holy Scripture. Now, as atheists deny God, together with the authority of the Scriptures, it must be obvious that to admit atheists (as such) into the counsels of the State, is to abandon our present position, and to acknowledge, as a factor in all future legislation, those who despise the name of Christ, and whose avowed object it is to overturn his religion and government.

FATHERS AT HOME.

Sir,—I really cannot agree with those who rather sentimentally pity a "poor man" having no place to amuse himself. If he has a home with a broken chair and rickety table, what better "amusement" could he have than mending them? How Tommy and Jenny would look on with admiring eyes while father, with an old tin (of which there are numbers thrown about in all lanes), a few nails, and a hammer, made the table firm and spliced the chair-leg. It can be done, for I have done it myself. And has the father no desire to make the acquaintance of his children? Does he wish to be "out of the way" until they are in bed, when he sees, of course, nothing of them during the day? Why cannot he find "amusement" in a game of play with them for an hour, so relieving the mother who has had them all day, and giving them a joyous interest in "Father's coming home"? Let "father" help Johnny to make his kite, make Jenny a toy cart, build a rabbit hutch, &c., &c. Has a man no interest in his own home that he must seek outside interests which will certainly wean him from his home? If he took that crying baby for even a few minutes and gave it a toss or two in his strong arms, most likely it would stop crying; and is it not his baby?

He is not half a man who has no companionship or community of interests with the woman he has asked to be his wife only that he may have a drudge.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

K. Y. W.

GEE-STREET MISSION.—The twentieth report of this Mission and Ragged School says:—"The Sunday-school is prospering, and the Gospel services are well attended, resulting in frequent conversions. The free breakfasts on Sunday morning are followed by a suitable service, to which the poor generally stay." The workers rejoice in the deep conviction or conversion of many hearers of the Gospel. Several testimonies are given to the value of the mission. Gee-street leads out of Goswell-road, St. Luke's. The Hon. Superintendent is Mr. Henry Rudgley, 82, Wood-street, Cheapside, E.C.

MORLEY HOME.—The second report of this Institution for worn-out, aged, and destitute governesses, needlewomen, and servants has been issued. Miss Coales recounts the way in which she was stirred to dedicate her life to this work after listening to one of Mr. Moody's addresses, delivered at Camberwell ten years ago. A Refuge has been provided for ten inmates, while fourteen others have received temporary shelter. Miss Coales makes an earnest appeal for help towards carrying out a long-cherished desire for largely extending the work, so as to accommodate fifty inmates. The address is 25, Chatham-place, Paragon-road, Hackney, E.

DR. HEYWOOD SMITH.—Everybody with a spark of good feeling will be glad to see that professional etiquette has for once not prevailed with the Royal College of Physicians. They have consulted their dignity by lecturing Dr. Heywood Smith and their sense of justice by leaving him where he was — an honoured and honourable member of the medical profession. We rejoice in the answer which the College of Physicians have thus given to the somewhat impertinent challenge which a prominent member of another profession gave them from the judicial bench; but we rejoice even more at the excellent general principles which the College have laid down apropos of the case. Their pronunciamiento against the examination of women is one of the most important outcomes of the whole business, and will drive another nail into the coffin of certain Acts.—Pall Mall Gazette.

M. N.—The Costermongers' Cottage Mission is still carried on by Mr. W. Penrose, whose address is Vinegar-row, City-road, E.C.

THURSDAY, DEC. 31.—EXODUS XXVII.

1, 2.—And thou shalt make an altar of shittim wood . . . and thou shalt overlay it with brass.—"The altar was the place where the sinner approached God, in the power and efficacy of the blood of atonement. It stood 'at the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation' (better in R.V. 'tent of meeting') and on it all the blood was shed. It was composed of shittim wood and brass. The wood was the same as that of the golden altar of incense; but the metal was different, and the reason of the difference was obvious. The altar of brass was the place where sin was dealt with according to the Divine judgment concerning it. The altar of gold was the place from which the precious fragrance of Christ's acceptableness ascended to the throne of God. The 'shittim wood,' as the figure of Christ's humanity, must be the same in each case; but in the brazen altar we see Christ meeting the fire of Divine justice; in the golden altar we behold Him feeding the Divine affections."—C. H. M.

FRIDAY, JAN. 1.—EXODUS XXVIII.

4.—Holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his sons.—The whole of the chapter, till the last four verses, is occupied with the description of the high priest's dress. The ephod, which was the characteristic dress of high priestly service, is first described along with the breastplate inseparably attached to it, in which the mysterious Urim and Thummim were placed. This ephod consisted of two parts fitted to the front and back, and joined over the shoulders by two onyx stones, on which were engraved the names of the tribes of Israel. These were also engraven on the stones in the breast, which he wore on his heart before the Lord. So Christ's people are borne on his shoulders for strength, and on his heart for affection, and that ever before the Lord. "The breastplate was attached inseparably to the ephod, never to be detached; there he carried the names of his people before the Lord, and could not, as thus dressed in the high priestly robes, be there without them, as it is expressed 'they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the Lord.' Thus are we borne before the Lord by Christ. He presents us as that which He has on his heart to God. He cannot be before Him without doing so, and whatever claim the desire and wish of Christ's heart has to draw out the favour of God, operates in drawing out that favour on us."—J. N. D. The order of the names on the shoulders, the place of security, was according to their birth; but on the breast plate, according to the places gained or lost by their character or conduct.

30.—Thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and Thummim—What these two words—which literally mean "lights and perfections"—denote, it is impossible to say. The plural form may be that of excellence, so that full light and perfection may be meant, but in what outward form these were represented we cannot say. Keil regards them as "a certain medium given by the Lord to his people, through which, whenever the congregation required Divine illumination to guide its actions, that illumination was guaranteed."

SATURDAY, JAN. 2.—EXODUS XXI.

The consecration of Aaron and his sons to the priest's office forms the subject of this chapter. Aaron and his sons represent Christ and his people. Aaron is anointed first, and alone (ver. 7). Then follows the sacrifice of the bullock, the sin offering (ver. 14), and then that of the two rams, the blood of the first being sprinkled before the Lord, while the blood of the second was put upon the ear, hand, and foot of Aaron and his sons, consecrating their hearing, their action, and their walk. Then oil and blood were together sprinkled upon their garments, and their hands filled with the wave offering of "the ram of consecration." The spiritual teaching of all this (not to go into detail) points to the thorough identification of Christ and his people in his sacrifice and consecration of Himself to God, so that they stand consecrated in his consecration. "By one offering hath he perfected for ever them that are sanctified."

38.—Two lambs . . . day by day continually. The daily sacrifice is here instituted which constituted the essential feature of the life of the nation, so that its interruption was regarded as the interruption of their national life. It was the daily witness of the expected coming of the Lamb of God.

SUNDAY, JAN. 3.—EXODUS XXX.

1.—And thou shalt make an altar to burn incense upon. In this altar "we have a type of Christ's intercession. The altar of burnt offering was covered over with brass, that it might bear the fire that was to consume the victim to ashes. This brazen altar typified the Lord Jesus Christ, and the brass of which it was made signified the Divine strength which upheld the manhood of the Lord Jesus, when the fire of God's wrath descended upon Him who was the victim for the sins of his people. The altar of incense was covered with gold; and, inasmuch as it was the more precious metal, it was significant of more glory than the other. It leads us to contemplate the intercession of the Lord Jesus Christ for his people. There was no crown on the altar of sacrifice; a crown was placed around the altar of incense (ver. 3). It was called (ver. 8) 'a perpetual incense.' Daily, morning and evening, it was offered up. A great truth is here presented to the mind; our need of the continual intercession of the Lord Jesus Christ."—W. H. Krause.

12.—Shall they give every man a ransom for his soul unto the Lord, when thou numberest them; that there be no plague among them.—The counting up of numbers tends to engender pride. The Divine antidote to this is the truth which the ransom-money was intended to set forth, "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price, therefore, glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are God's."

MONDAY, JAN. 4.—EXODUS XXXI.

2.—See, I have called by name Bezaleel, &c.—"Whether for 'the work of the tabernacle' of old, or 'the work of the ministry' now, there should be the Divine selection, the Divine call, the Divine qualification, the Divine appointment; and all must be done according to the Divine commandment. Men may run as sent of their fellow, or men may run of themselves; but let it be remembered that all who run, without being sent of God, shall one day or other be covered with shame and confusion of face. Such is the plain and wholesome doctrine suggested by the words, 'I have called,' 'I have filled,' 'I have given,' 'I have put,' 'I have commanded.' The words of the Baptist must ever hold good, 'A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven' (John iii. 27)."—C. H. M.

13.—Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep—"It seems likely that this penal edict was specially introduced as a caution in reference to the construction of the tabernacle, lest the people in their zeal to carry on the work should be tempted to break the Divine law for the observance of the day."—Sp. Com.

TUESDAY, JAN. 5.—EXODUS XXXII.

1.—Up make us gods.—"The substantive is plural in form, and may denote gods. But, according to the Hebrew idiom, the meaning need not be plural, and hence the word is used as the common designation of the true God. It here denotes a god, and should be so rendered (so margin R.V.) It is evident that what the Israelites asked for was a visible god."—Sp. Com.

4.—These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.—This should be rendered (as in margin R.V.) "this is thy god." It is manifest that the calf was intended to represent Jehovah, as they must have been familiar with the ox-worship of the Egyptians. So Aaron says, in the next verse, "To-morrow is a feast to Jehovah." Their sin was a breach of the second, not of the first, conmandment.

7.—Thy people, which Thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves." From this to the end of the chapter, is recorded the trial of Moses as mediator. "He rejects the offer of glory for himself and intercedes for the nation."

19.—He cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them.—"As the Lord has not branded this act with the mark of his displeasure, we hold it to have been done according to the Lord's mind It is a most significant comment upon James ii 20: 'Whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.' When Moses came down from the mount, and dashed these tables to the ground, and brake them before the people, it was as much as to say, 'God made a covenant with you. You have broken one of his commandments, and therefore you have broken all.'"—W. H. Krause.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 6.—EXODUS XXXIII.

2.—And I will send an angel before thee. The reason assigned for this, is given in the next verse, "For I will not go up in the midst of thee; for thou art a stiff-necked people; lest I consume thee in the way." Moses, however, afterwards pleads (ver. 12) "Thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me," and adds (ver. 13) "Consider that this nation is thy people," thus as it were casting back upon the Lord his responsibility, which He could not disown, and the result of this successful pleading on the part of Moses, "who was faithful in all his house," is the gracious answer of (ver. 14) "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." This is a virtual retractation of the threat conveyed in ver. 3, "I will not go with thee," and is expressly stated to be a grant of grace to Moses (ver. 17), "I will do this thing that thou hast spoken; for thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name." And He further adds, in response to the request, "Show me thy glory," a proclamation of the sovereignty of his grace—"I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will show mercy on whom I will show mercy." In other words, as Israel had now broken the covenant and had lost all claim on Jehovah on the ground of works, He will now proclaim his character as a God of grace; but of sovereign grace, unfettered by any necessity to show mercy to any but those on whom He "will show mercy."

THURSDAY, JAN. 7.—EXODUS XXXIV.

1.—Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first.—"When Moses had restored the covenant bond through his intercession (xxxiii. 14) he was directed by Jehovah to hew out two stones, &c. . . and Jehovah would write upon them the same words as upon the first, and thus restore the covenant record."—Keil.

5.—And the Lord descended in the cloud and. . . . proclaimed the name of the Lord.—Contrast this with the scene described in chap. xix. 18, where "the Lord descended upon (Mount Sinai) in fire," &c., and proclaimed what Israel was to do. Here He proclaims what He is, and in thus proclaiming His name, He provides a refuge for those who cannot stand before Him on the ground of the law. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower, the righteous runneth into it and is safe" (Prov. xviii. 10).

6.—The Lord God merciful and gracious.—"Here (in contrast to chap. xx) grace, mercy and goodness are placed in the front. Accordingly all the words which the language contained to express the ideá of grace in its varied manifestations to the sinner, are crowded together here to reveal the fact that in his inmost being God is love."—Keil.

FRIDAY, JAN. 8.—EXODUS XXXV.

11.—The tabernacle, his tent, and his covering.—"In the instructions for making the Sanctuary, the Ark of the Covenant, as the principal thing belonging to it, is mentioned first; but in the practical order of the work, as it is here arranged, the Tabernacle with his tent and covering come first."—Sp. Com.

"If we are to look at this tabernacle as typical of Gospel things, which most assuredly it is, our minds are at once directed to that which, in Heb. ix., the Apostle designates, 'a greater and more perfect Tabernacle.' This—of which the tabernacle in the wilderness was only a type and emblem—is the perfect adaptation of the Gospel scheme to the necessities of God's servants. Think of the altar of burnt offering, and the altar of incense, and the ark, and mercy seat, and the candlestick, and the vail, and the laver, and the anointing oil, and the priest and priest's dress, and do you not, in one glance, see much that is typical of the complete adaptation of what is in Christ to the necessities of the poor sinner? So that, you perceive, we are never straitened in the Lord; whatever the miserable condition of the sinner may demand, is to be found in Christ."—W. H. Krause.

SATURDAY, JAN. 9.—EXODUS XXXVI.

1.—Every wise hearted man, in whom the Lord put wisdom and understanding. Such is the description of those who wrought the work of the Sanctuary, and there is added the object for which this wisdom was given, "to know how to work all manner of work for the service of the Sanctuary," and then is stated the rule to be followed; not what these wise ones (though endowed with special wisdom from God) should themselves design, but "according to all that the Lord had commanded." "The Lord had given the most minute instructions concerning the entire work of the Tabernacle. Every pin, every socket, every loop, every tack, was accurately set forth. There was no room left for man's expediency, his reason, or his common sense. Jehovah did not give a great outline, and leave man to fill it up. He left no margin whatever in which man might enter his regulations. See, saith He, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee on the mount. This left no room for human device. If man had been allowed to make a single pin, that pin would have been most assuredly out of place in the judgment of God. We can see what man's 'graving tool' produces in chap xxxii. Thank God it had no place in the Tabernacle. They did in this matter just what they were told, nothing more, nothing less."—C. H. M.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

"Not one good thing hath failed."

While just on the threshold of the New Year, it is indeed profitable briefly to review the past, and the quotation, as above, records the experience not only of 1885, but also that realised since 1851, in working for the protection of Friendless Girls and the Rescue of those who had erred from the right path; and with respect to the future Deut. xxxi. 6 will doubtless be fulfilled.

Never in my whole experience did I feel the necessity of the fulfilment of the promises of St. John xvi. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, as at the present time. Money to support the Homes, &c., is needful, but the manifest work of the Holy Spirit to convince of sin IS THE ESSENTIAL TO THAT SUCCESS which alone can bring glory to Jesus.

At this season there will be many Prayer-meetings convened to pray for a blessing upon the work of 1886, but how few Christians, comparatively, can attend them; still, all can everywhere unite in pleading at the one Throne, for spiritual success, not only on this work, but every Mission which has for its end the Glory of God, and the salvation of the lost.

"These are 'Pearls' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books; and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work. We wish it the wide circulation it well deserves."

The Record, Dec. 18th, 1885.

"These expositions of, or rather lessons from, the Parables, have been written since A. L. O. E. went to India as a missionary. They were intended to aid in bringing Hindus and Mohammedans to the faith of Christ, and are written from an Oriental point of view. Nevertheless, English readers will enjoy and may profit by them. All will rejoice to receive a fresh work from the hands of so old a favourite as A. L. O. E."

Church Sunday School Magazine, Jan., 1886.

"A delightful contribution to Biblical literature, and especially valuable on account of its local colouring, the writer, as will be known to most of our readers, having been now for some years engaged in mission work in Hindustan. The illustrative portions, in themselves striking, are made entirely subservient to the forcible appeals of the writer; and we can but echo the remark in the Publishers' Preface, that no one can read what is written without being struck with the manner in which the Parables adapt themselves for use in Evangelistic Lessons.' The volume is enriched with a series (twenty-four in number) of specially-designed Illustrations—good both in their design and drawing."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

INTERESTING CASE of a LITTLE BOY.

MRS. A. LEE first brought her son to me on Sept. 11, last year. She was then residing at Thornton Heath.

The little boy had commenced ailing from the Christmas before that date. Inflammation of the lungs took place; after which he gradually declined.

When brought to me his cough was distressing, so violent at night that it almost choked him: the breathing was very bad; he had wasted, and had gradually become weaker, so that hope of saving him had almost fled.

Instructions and advice were given personally and by letter from time to time, and medicine continued to the following spring.

From that period the little patient continued well. The following is an extract from a letter I recently received from Mrs. Lee:—"I am thankful to say that my little boy is quite restored. He has grown so stout, and looks so well, our friends are all astonished at the change. Your advice and medicine, by God's blessing, have been the making of him. Please accept my best thanks. Make what use you please of my humble testimony.—A. LEE (now living at), 3, GORHAM PLACE, ST. CLEMENT'S ROAD, NOTTING HILL."

The Oxford Helps to the Study of the Bible

Have been carefully Revised and Enlarged from time to time by Dr. Stubbs, Bishop of Chester; Dr. Edwin Palmer, Archdeacon of Oxford; Dr. Angus, and other eminent Scholars. The Scientific information was prepared under the supervision of Professors Rolleston, Westwood, Lawson, and Earle, names of the highest authority in their several departments.

What the Press says of the Oxford Helps to the Study of the Bible.

THE CHRISTIAN, December 25, 1884.	"A more perfect compendium of valuable aids to Biblical Study can scarcely be conceived; indeed it forms in itself a small but copious reference library of sacred literature. No one who can obtain it should be without a copy."
THE GUARDIAN.	"A perfect library in Notes, Tables, and Maps."
THE JOHN BULL, April 4, 1885.	"A more helpful boon to students of Holy Scripture could not be imagined."
THE NONCONFORMIST, December 24, 1884.	"The whole appears to be admirably done, and the wonder is how such an immense amount of information can be packed into so small a compass."
METHODIST RECORDER, January 30, 1885.	"This invaluable work needs no further recommendation from us; all the subjects are handled with the greatest ability, and still further enhance the value of this unrivalled book."
BRITISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.	"In scholarly, compressed, and useful information, we know nothing to compare with them."
SCHOOLMASTER, February 27, 1885.	"We can confidently assert that it surpasses all its predecessors."
PALL MALL GAZETTE, December 20, 1884.	"Every Bible student knows them to be the best collection of Biblical information ever brought together in so small a compass."

LAMB AND FLAG
RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

"THOU ART WITH ME."

(Ps. xxiii. 4.)

A New Year's Address.

By JOHN E. LINNELL,

Vicar of Pavenham, Bedford.

Neatly printed on Tinted Paper, suitable for enclosing in Letters, or for General Distribution.

1s. per Dozen; 7s. per 100.

"Precious, precious words! In poverty or in plenty, in gladness or in grief, in health and strength or the prey of pining sickness, with pilgrim feet on life's rough path, or walking the valley of the shadow of death, still and ever

"THOU ART WITH ME."

"When the writer was once taking a class of little girls, he asked them to imagine themselves far away in some waste and howling wilderness. 'Would you expect to perish with hunger,' he inquired, 'if the Lord Jesus were there among you?' The children all said, 'No.'

"Then in fancy they went away to a far-off trackless forest. 'Are you not fearful, in a place like this, of being lost and left here for ever, with no one but the Lord Jesus to be your guide?' In chorus they still cried, 'No.'

"Once more, he requested them to picture the united armies of earth, all arrayed against their defenceless selves. 'Are you not afraid,' he asked, 'having none but the Lord Jesus to protect you?' But the answer again was, 'No.'

"And will not the Lord Jesus, in Spirit, be with his people always?—in all places, and in all circumstances? Is it not his own pledged word, 'I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee'? Shall that which upholdeth all things be broken? or an end be found to 'never?' Nay; and we may add a word to our text without in any way taking from its blessed fulness, and each say, 'Thou art EVER with me.'"—Extract.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

This Society undertakes a work beyond the aim and capability of ordinary Missionary Societies. It is founded on an unsectarian basis, and receives its support from Christians of all denominations. Its Committee and Agents belong to several Christian bodies, and its Honorary Secretaries are A. Saphir, D.D., and J. H. Rigg, D.D.

It has upwards of 100 who carry the Gospel to the Jews in England, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Russia, and Turkey. Tracts and copies of the Scriptures are circulated. Many Jews have by this Society been led to believe that "Jesus is the Christ." Much good has been done among the thousands of Jews in London by the Missionaries, by the House of Call, and by the new Mission House, with its important Medical Missions.

Increased Funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Rev. J. Dunlop, at the Office, 96, Great Russell-street. Bloomsbury London.

THE WATERCRESS AND FLOWER GIRL MISSION AND BRIGADE,

LATE PRESIDENT ... ... THE LATE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

FLOWER GIRL MISSION

The work of the Mission is to reach with the Gospel the many poor women and girls engaged in the streets selling flowers, watercresses, &c. The Missionary and Bible-women are constantly engaged visiting in the markets in early mornings, the theatres, music-halls, &c., at night; also in the homes of the sick, seeking to take the young from the streets, placing them in "service" or homes. Mothers' Meetings, Clubs, Classes, Clothing and Loan Clubs are specially held for these women, School and Classes for the children, and Hot Meat Dinners in the winter for the little ones. The Sunday School, Bands of Hope, Sewing Classes, Meetings, Services, Free Breakfasts to poor women, and Lodgings for the homeless, are among the branches of our work.

The Flower Girl Brigade consists of young girls and children found engaged selling in the streets, removed from its demoralizing influences, drafted into the Brigade where they are brought under Christian influence, trained to habits of industry and fitted for domestic service; or those who are for any reason found unsuitable for service are taught the business of artificial flower-making; every girl takes her share of the domestic work, cleaning, cooking, needle-work, &c. Over 300 of these little flower-sellers have been taken from the streets, and enabled to earn their own living, without resorting to the streets again.

OUR GRAND-PARENTS

Of the good old times tell us that in their day each season of the year had distinctive weather. Nowadays we are not privileged to calculate in this matter with anything like precision.

We have now arrived at that season of the year generally associated with frost, snow, and wintry winds, but we are often at a loss what kind of weather to expect. We have a few days of exceedingly mild weather, and shortly after the Yule log is not at all to be despised. Owing to the tendency to rely upon artificial means for warmth, the unsettled character of our climate renders it necessary to vary the number of wraps for our protection according to our susceptibility. We are every year living more artificially, and are obliged to take extraordinary precautions against cold. This renders us as sensitive to change as plants of hothouse growth.

Many people grumble about our climate, and draw disparaging comparisons between this and other countries, but there are comparatively few who care to change their quarters, even if they have the means of doing so. Of course, there is no human possibility of changing the climate, but it is possible to a great extent to counteract its effects without in any way neutralising the keenness with which the Creator has endued the exquisitely sensitive nervous system. The latter course, though advocated by some, is decidedly wrong, for, as Dryden says,

If we destroy natural sensitiveness in any part of our frame, we surely tamper with the Creator's design, and suffer accordingly. We may, however, augment our resisting power, and so lessen susceptibility to climatic influences. This can only be done by keeping every organ fully up to its work. People who are less affected by atmospheric changes than others are only so because in their organs a better action exists than in those of persons who feel every variation in the weather. If the natural action of the heat-producing forces of the body becomes impaired, we should not pander to this weakness by the use of extra dress, by the use of stimulants for the purpose (as some people say) of "keeping out the cold," or by using a hot water bottle at night; such means of obtaining warmth only weaken the natural vigour of the circulation, and lessen the resisting forces of the system, which should protect us against external influences. Such artificial means minimise the chances of ever recovering our normal condition, and of the cure of any chronic affection

Our first effort should be not a verbal raid upon the weather, but to ascertain the why and wherefore of our increasing susceptibility to weather influences. When ordinary remedies fail us it is pretty clear that we have not arrived at the real cause, and if we do not promptly ascertain this, the mischief will certainly become chronic and serious.

By slow degrees we are led to perceive that the readiest help is found in natural means such as pure air, water, light, heat, with moderate and regular outdoor exercise, and in more directly inhaling the Magnetic and Electric influences constantly surrounding us. This universally beneficent effect of natural law, by which we receive imperceptible help from external influences, is impeded in its operations upon multitudes, because with them the recuperating or appropriating power is low. Can the impediment be removed? Yes! Nature and Art combine to supply, in the Odo-Magnetic garments, that vitalising force which acts upon, or with, the animating principle of our life, and coalesces with all the forces of the physical economy, restoring the natural order and normal condition of our being. Silent in operation, imperceptible in action, but at the same time most powerful in its energising effect.

The repeated recognition of these facts by those who have adopted Odo-Magnetic Treatment—a recognition in some instances absolutely forced upon the sceptical mind by its marvellous effects—has won for it an ever-widening range of operation, with corresponding success.

Having spent many years of patient, laborious, and continued study in the Art of Healing by natural remedies, and in adapting his treatment to some of the most obscure and intractable affections, Mr. Garratt now claims, as the result of his professional career, to have attained a success unparalleled in meeting the essential needs of chronic sufferers. Those who desire further information on his method of treatment should peruse his latest brochure, "A Few Minutes Conversation on Life and Health," explaining the radical effect of Magnetism upon the human organism in health and disease. Every attention is given gratuitously to the case submitted, whether by correspondence or consultation; and if in any instance experience does not warrant Mr. Garratt in recommending his treatment, he will say so. On his advice being accepted, patients may be assured of having the remedy carefully adapted to their several needs, upon the principles laid down in his published essays, which can be obtained post free on application. He will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 1000 names as referees, to any address.—B. COPSON GARRATT, MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, 16, FINSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.
